Extent of separation

Where return of service on summons showed service by leaving at usual place of abode as authorized by statute, but testimony showed that copy of summons was left in business office of person served opening off the opposite side of the common hallway from door of apartment used by him as living quarters, service did not satisfy requirement of statute.—U. S. v. N. Tully Semel, Inc., supra.

27. Conn.—Clover v. Urban, 142 A. 389, 108 Conn. 13.

28. Ill.—Hiram Walker Distributing Co. v. Giaccone, 89 N.E.2d 748, 339 Ill.App. 279—Albers v. Bramberg, 32 N.E.2d 362, 308 Ill.App. 463.

The terms "usual place of abode" and "usual place of residence" are generally held to refer to the time of service;<sup>29</sup> hence it is not sufficient under such a statute to leave the copy at defendant's former dwelling house, residence, or place of abode, as the case may be, after his removal therefrom,<sup>30</sup> or to leave it at defendant's last address in the state before leaving for another state.<sup>31</sup> It has been held that one may have two or more usual places of abode for the purpose of serving process.<sup>32</sup>

Generally speaking, unless the case comes within a statute providing therefor, leaving a copy at the home of defendant is not good service.<sup>33</sup> Some statutes provide for the leaving of the writ at some public place at defendant's dwelling or at some obvious part of the house;<sup>34</sup> but, where the statute requires the process to be left with particular persons, merely leaving it at, or affixing it to, some part of the premises of defendant's residence, without delivering it to such a person, is insufficient.<sup>35</sup> It has been held that leaving a copy with a proper person in a yard, path, or other part of the premises near the house or residence is sufficient;<sup>36</sup> but it has also been held necessary to leave it with such person at some part of the house.<sup>37</sup> Leaving it with a servant on the piazza of the house has been held to be sufficient.<sup>38</sup>

A statute allowing service by leaving a copy at the place of business when residence cannot be ascertained does not apply to allow service in this manner on a nonresident<sup>39</sup> or on one not having a proprietary interest in the business.<sup>40</sup>

Concurrent requirement. Where the statute requires other notice in addition to leaving at last and usual place, failure to give such notice renders the process invalid.<sup>41</sup>

Time for serving. When the statute provides that process may be left at defendant's residence

Service held insufficient

(1) Usual place of abode of defendant who was inducted into navy was not at grandmother's home at which defendant had lived for six months before entering military service and with whom defendant had infrequently communicated after induction, within meaning of statute providing for substituted service of summons by leaving copy of summons at usual place of abode.—Gounis v. Crockett, 173 P.2d 650, 110 Utah 372.

(2) Attempted substituted service made on father of emancipated minor who at time was working on farm away from his father's home was ineffectual to confer jurisdiction of person of minor, since not made at minor's usual place of abode, which was farm home at which he was working.—Caskey v. Effect of actual notice to defendant

While in a proper case substituted service is sufficient if defendant acquires actual notice in due time, where it affirmatively appears that, unknown to defendant and during his temporary absence therefrom, a copy of the summons was left by the serving officer at defendant's home and neither the summons nor such copy came to his knowledge prior to judgment defendant has not had the notice which the law requires.—Richardson v. Pali, 34 Hawaii 328.

Under the statutes regulating substituted service, a copy of the process must generally be left with some designated person, such as a member of defendant's family or a person living at the house, and meeting certain requirements as to age, discretion, etc.

Under most statutes providing for substituted service, the copy of the process may be left only with certain designated persons, as a member of defendant's family, or a person over a certain age living at the house, or a person of suitable age and discretion, resident therein, etc.,<sup>43</sup> and attempted substitute service which does not meet the requirements of such statutes is invalid.<sup>44</sup> Such statutes presuppose that such a relation of confidence exists between the person with whom the copy is left and defendant that notice will reach defendant;<sup>45</sup> they assume that such person will deliver the process or copy to defendant<sup>46</sup> or in some way give him notice thereof.<sup>47</sup> Nevertheless, it has been held that substituted service is not defective because the person with whom the process is left does not understand the significance of the papers and is not advised to deliver them to defendant.<sup>48</sup>

"Family"

(1) The term "family" as used in a statute authorizing service of process on some person of the family should be broadly construed.

N.J.—Sullivan v. Walburn, 154 A. 617, 9 N.J.Misc. 280.

Okl.—Moore v. Kasishke, 117 P.2d 113, 189 Okl. 336, 136 A.L.R. 1502.

(2) Broadly speaking, it means a collective body of persons who live in one house under one head or manager, including parents, children, and servants, and, in some instances, lodgers and boarders.—Sullivan v. Walburn, 154 A. 617, 9 N.J.Misc. 280—50 C.J. p 493 note 34 [a] (1).

(3) The word is not confined to blood relatives of defendant residing at his home.

Okl.—Moore v. Kasishke, supra.

(4) Nor is it confined to persons under defendant's control or in his employ; thus a widowed mother, who resides with her son, is a member of his family, within the meaning of the statute.—Ellington v. Moore, 17 Mo. 424.

(5) Other decisions construing the word "family" see 50 C.J. p 493 note 34 [a].

Servants

(1) Domestic servants living in the establishment are generally regarded as included in the term "family."

50 C.J. p 493 note 34 [a] (1).

(2) However, servants who render only occasional services and do not live in the house cannot be regarded as members of the family.—Waber v. Schaffhauser, supra.

(3) So it has been held that a maid with no definite contract of employment was not a member of the family on whom substituted service could be made.—Thompson v. Butler, 243 N.W. 164, 214 Iowa 1123.

(4) So too, a nursemaid employed regularly about twice a week, but who did not reside with defendant, was not a person of the family.—Sullivan v. Walburn, supra.

(5) Defendant's negro servant who with his wife resided in a separate house on defendant's premises was not a member of his family.—Moore v. Kasishke, 117 P.2d 113, 189 Okl. 336, 136 A.L.R. 1502.

(6) An elderly negro who was janitor at defendant's rooming house but maintained separate residence was not a person of the family.—Zuckerman v. McCulley, D.C.Mo., 7 F.R.D. 739, appeal dismissed, C.C.A., 170 F.2d 1015.

Service held invalid

Service of process in two actions by tacking summons to door in presence of witness who came with constable for purpose of later becoming a statutory witness, and by serving another summons on person whom defendant did not know, was invalid, notwithstanding defendants apparently were evading service.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Doe (Aguzzino), 267 N.W. 649, 276 Mich. 507.

45. Iowa.—Thompson v. Butler, 243 N.W. 164, 214 Iowa 1123.

"The relationship between the person receiving a copy of the summons and the person upon whom service is thereby attempted must be more confidential and intimate than is the case in most employer-employee or master and servant relationships in order that the receipt of such notice by the former may be deemed to be valid notice to the latter."—Moore v. person living at defendant's usual place of abode, delivery to one who does not reside with defendant is bad.<sup>57</sup> If the statute requires the writ to be left with a member of defendant's family, it is sufficient to leave it with a member of the family in which he resides, where he has no family of his own;<sup>58</sup> but in the absence of such a requirement anyone living with defendant is a suitable person.<sup>59</sup> If the member of the family is also plaintiff, service by leaving the copy with plaintiff is bad.<sup>60</sup> Where the statute merely requires the presence of some person, it need not be left with an occupant of defendant's abode.<sup>61</sup>

While it is not essential that the person with whom the copy is left be an adult,<sup>62</sup> yet, even though the statute is silent as to the age of the person with whom the copy shall be left, it must be construed to mean a person of such age as would understand what was intended to be done with the summons.<sup>63</sup>

Person in charge of business. Where, by statute, the copy may be left at defendant's place of business with a person in charge thereof, "person in charge" is held to mean one who may be presumed to have been vested with some authority and to owe a corresponding duty to defendant.<sup>64</sup>

§ 49. — Informing Recipient as to Contents

There must be a compliance with a statute requiring that the person with whom the process is left be informed of its contents; otherwise the service is ineffective.

Where the statute requires that the person with whom process is left be informed of its contents, such a provision is mandatory,<sup>65</sup> and mere delivery without such informing is insufficient.<sup>66</sup> Where the process is duly left with a proper person at defendant's home, enclosed in an envelope addressed to defendant, the fact that such envelope is sealed does not render the service invalid, where the papers reach defendant and he is not prejudiced.<sup>67</sup>

§ 50. Service on Agent or Attorney

Under permissive statute, substituted service may in a proper case be effected by service of a copy on an agent of a nonresident or, under some circumstances, of a resident, or on the defendant's attorney.

While such methods of service are invalid without statutory authority,<sup>68</sup> some statutes, which have been upheld as constitutional,<sup>69</sup> provide for service on a nonresident defendant or on a resident defend-

Relative living separately

(1) Defendant's mother, who maintained permanent home, but who usually visited in defendant's home during winter months, was not a member of defendant's family so as to authorize service on defendant by delivering copy of summons to mother at defendant's residence.—Cleaves v. Funk, C.C.A.Okl., 76 F.2d 328.

(2) Where, at time of service of process, defendant's usual place of abode was on first floor of building and defendant's stepdaughter lived in an apartment on second floor and maintained separate living quarters, stepdaughter was not some person of family within statute providing for substitute or constructive service and attempted service by leaving a copy of process with stepdaughter was a nullity.—Conley v. McNamara, 79 N.E.2d 345, 334 Ill. App. 396.

Reasonableness of exercise of police power

(1) State's power to confer jurisdiction on courts over persons of individual nonresidents by substituted service depends on whether such statute is reasonable exercise of police power, so that if regulation is for protection of health, safety, and welfare of those within its borders, rather than mere attempt to extend jurisdiction of its courts over citizens beyond its borders, state may legislate to that end.—Sugg v. Hendrix, C.C.A.Miss., 142 F.2d 740.

(2) The statute authorizing service on nonresident by delivery of process to secretary of state, which takes due precaution to insure defendant of receipt of notice and a reasonable opportunity to appear and defend, is for protection of citizens within confines of the state and is a reasonable regulation of the police power of the state.—Davis v. Nugent, D.C.Miss., 90 F.Supp. 522.

Particular statutes held valid

(1) Statute authorizing service on agent employed in agency through which business involved was transacted.—Davidson v. Henry L. Doherty & Co., 241 N.W. 700, 214 Iowa 739, 91 A.L.R. 1308.

(2) Statute permitting substituted service on agent of nonresident individual on a cause of action arising out of local business.

ant under certain circumstances by service on defendant's agent,<sup>70</sup> or on the resident agents of certain classes of principals,<sup>71</sup> or on a state officer, such as the secretary of state, deemed by reason of express statutory provision to be defendant's agent to receive process,<sup>72</sup> or on an agent appointed to receive process<sup>73</sup> under a provision requiring such appointment where defendant is doing business in the state and the business is of a dangerous nature and subject to the police power of the state.<sup>74</sup>

Statutes also sometimes permit individuals to designate persons on whom service of process may be made in their behalf during their absence from the state,<sup>75</sup> and the provisions of the statute allowing such designation must be observed.<sup>76</sup> While it has been held that such a statute should be liberally construed in order to accomplish the purpose for which it was enacted,<sup>77</sup> it has also been held that such a statute is in derogation of the common law, and for that reason should be strictly construed.<sup>78</sup> The circumstances of the case must fall within the terms of the statute.<sup>79</sup> Service

50 C.J. p 494 note 53.

Purpose of statute

The statute relating to service of summons on a nonresident doing business within the state was enacted in order to confer on the courts of the state personal jurisdiction over a nonresident engaged in business in the state in any cause of action growing out of the business, by substituted service on the person in charge of the local business of the nonresident.—Miller v. Swann, 28 N.Y.S.2d 247, 176 Misc. 607.

Statute applicable to nonresident as well as resident

(1) Statute authorizing service on agent employed in agency through which business involved was transacted applies to nonresident individuals as well as to individuals who are residents of state but not of county in which agency is situated.—Goodman v. Henry L. Doherty & Co., 255 N.W. 667, 218 Iowa 529, affirmed Henry L. Doherty & Co. v. Goodman, 55 S.Ct. 553, 294 U.S. 623, 79 L.Ed. 1097.—Davidson v. Henry L. Doherty & Co., 241 N.W. 700, 214 Iowa 739, 91 A.L.R. 1308.

(2) However, a federal court has held that the statute, while applicable to nonresident corporations or partnerships, cannot be constitutionally applied to a nonresident individual who is a citizen of the United States.—Western Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Lamson Bros. & Co., D.C.Iowa, 42 F.Supp. 1007.

Partnership

As used in statute providing that when corporation, company, or individual has an office or agent in any county other than that in which principal resides, service may be had on agent or clerk employed in such office or agency, in actions growing out of or in connection with business thereof, the word "company" includes a "partnership."—Western Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Lamson Bros. & Co., supra.

Noncompliance with statute requiring designation of agent

Nonresident could not defeat resident's right to claim benefit of statute providing that, when a nonresident conducts a business within the state by an agent, he may be sued on any action arising out of conduct of such business and summons may be served on an agent, by failing to designate an agent in accordance with statute.—Wein v. Crockett, Utah, 195 P.2d 222.

Action growing out of automobile accident

(1) Statute permitting service of summons on nonresidents by making service on the secretary of state applies only in action growing out of accident while operating motor vehicle and does not apply to action on contract.—Ask Mr. Foster Travel Service v. Tauck Tours, 43 N.Y.S.2d 524.

(2) Service of summons, in action against nonresident defendant for abuse of process, by service on commissioner of revenue as agent under statute authorizing such service in action against nonresident motorist, was improper, entitling defendant to dismissal of cause of action, since such action could not have arisen out of automobile accident.—Lindsay v. Short, 186 S.E. 239, 210 N.C. 287.

made in conformity with the statute is good,<sup>80</sup> but service is not good where the person served is not an agent within the meaning of the statute,<sup>81</sup> or where the cause of action is not connected with

Doing or engaging in business

(1) One of the conditions which must exist to justify substituted service on a local agent of a nonresident individual is that such nonresident shall have engaged in business in the state.—Interchemical Corp. v. Mirabelli, 54 N.Y.S.2d 522, 269 App. Div. 224.

(2) The phrase "engage in business" as used in the statute is equivalent to the phrase "doing business" used in the statute relating to foreign corporations.—Debre v. Hanna, 45 N.Y.S.2d 551, 182 Misc. 824.

(3) The statutory requirement for doing business in the state is not satisfied unless a substantial part of defendant's business is conducted within the state.—Melvin Pine & Co. v. McConnell, 76 N.Y.S.2d 279, 273 App. Div. 218, 10 A.L.R.2d 194, affirmed 80 N.E.2d 137, 298 N.Y. 27.

(4) Nonresidents, who owned numerous buildings in the state which were managed for the nonresidents by real estate agents, were engaged in business within the state, within statute relating to service of summons on nonresidents who engage in business within the state.—Miller v. Swann, 28 N.Y.S.2d 247, 176 Misc. 607.

(5) On the other hand, where defendant, a Spanish wine and liquor dealer, did not have an office, bank account, telephone or directory listing, employees, or merchandise or samples of its products in New York, and was represented in United States by a sales representative, who also represented a number of other concerns and maintained his own office at his own expense, and transactions arranged by such representative were not binding until approved by defendant in Spain, service of process on defendant by serving sales representative was ineffective.—O'Hagan v. Caballero, 52 N.Y.S.2d 863, affirmed 59 N.Y.S.2d 300, 269 App. Div. 981.

Having "office or agency" in county

(1) As used in the statute providing for substituted service on a corporation, business trust, or any person having "an office or agency" in any county other than that in which the chief officer or principal resides by serving an agent or clerk, the words "agency" and "office" designate a place at which business of the company or individual is transacted by an agent.—Johnson Freight Lines v. Davis, 93 S.W.2d 637, 170 Tenn. 177.

(2) Accordingly, a nonresident individual engaged in transportation of freight by truck, who had no office in the county beyond renting platform space at truck terminal, and wherein such nonresident maintained a part-time solicitor of freight for a week and a half, did not have an office or agency within county so as to authorize service of process on such solicitor.—Johnson Freight Lines v. Davis, supra.

Termination of "doing business"

Where rooming house had been sold and nonresident former owner had ceased doing business in state several months before action was commenced against her for injuries sustained by tenant before cessation of doing business, service on one who had formerly passed on to defendant rents collected by another was ineffective to acquire jurisdiction over person of defendant.—Haire v. Chilson, 200 S.W.2d 107, 304 Ky. 119.

Blue-Sky transactions

(1) Where licensed brokers allegedly accepted securities from investment manager and credited manager's account with proceeds of securities which manager had secured from customers pursuant to contracts which constituted unregistered securities and where brokers allegedly had knowledge of fact, action based on theory that brokers had converted securities related to "transaction covered" by the Blue-Sky Law within provision authorizing service on nonresident broker by service on commissioner of securities.—Thomas v. Atkins, D.C. Minn., 52 F.Supp. 405.

(2) Securities act, requiring nonresident corporation to appoint attorney on whom process may be served, is not intended to confer jurisdiction only on commissioner of securities in proceedings generally known as typical Blue-Sky suits.—Vogel v. Chase Securities Corporation, D.C. Minn., 19 F.Supp. 564.

(3) However, the appointment of commissioner of securities as agent for service of process under statute by nonresident issuer of securities, who was not engaged in selling such securities within state and who had no office, agent, or employee therein, did not constitute commissioner the issuer's agent for service of process in action to recover for issuer's alleged subsequent conversion of securities issued by it and purchased by a resident of state from a dealer therein who was neither agent, employee, nor representative of issuer.—Boyum v. Massachusetts Investors Trust, 10 N.W.2d 379, 215 Minn. 485.

80. U.S.—Davis v. Nugent, D.C. Miss., 90 F.Supp. 522—Vogel v. Chase Securities Corporation, D.C. Minn., 19 F.Supp. 564.

Minn.—Kaiser v. Butchart, 265 N.W. 826, 197 Minn. 28.

81. U.S.—Norwalk v. Air-Way Electric Appliance Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 14 F.Supp. 129, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 87 F.2d 317, 110 A.L.R. 183.

50 C.J. p 495 note 64.

Person in charge

(1) Under the statute providing that a nonresident defendant doing business in the state may be served by leaving a copy of the process with a person in charge of such business, the person in charge must be one who is vested with general powers of judgment and discretion.—Melvin Pine & Co. v. McConnell, 76 N.Y.S.2d 279, 273 App. Div. 218, 10 A.L.R.2d 194, affirmed 80 N.E.2d 137, 298 N.Y. 27.

(2) A real estate corporation, which managed nonresident owners' building where alleged accident giving rise to plaintiff's cause of action occurred, and various other buildings owned by the owners, was in charge of the owners' business within the state, within statute relating to service of summons on nonresidents doing business within the state, so that service of summons, complaint, and notice on vice president of the corporation was sufficient service on the owners.—Miller v. Swann, 28 N.Y.S.2d 247, 176 Misc. 607.

Truck driver

In suit for damages resulting from drinking part of bottle of beverage containing spider, service obtained by serving summons in county in which defendant company had no place of business on truck driver, who was delivering company's products to persons engaged in business in such county, was defective, since statute regarding service of summons on truck drivers has application only to action for damages to persons or property occasioned by negligent operation of truck.—Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Southwest, Ark., v. Bacon, 97 S.W.2d 74, 193 Ark. 6.

Agent for limited purpose

An agent for the leasing of one piece of real estate and the collection of rents therefrom is not an agent for the service of process within the meaning of the statute.—Naughton v. McNamara, 45 Pa. Dist. & Co. 135, 44 Lack. Jur. 51, 57 York Leg. Rec. 4.

Termination of agency after transaction involved

Service of process on an agent in charge of an agency out of which the transaction in question arose is sufficient to confer jurisdiction as to the business of the agency or does not arise out of the business engaged in by defendant in the state,<sup>82</sup> or where the process is served on an agent otherwise competent, but whose relations to plaintiff or to the claim are such as to make it to his interest to suppress the fact of service.<sup>83</sup>

Under statutes of the character under discussion it has been held proper to serve a broker for the sale of defendant's land,<sup>84</sup> an agent for the collection of rents,<sup>85</sup> or a pilot or master of a boat.<sup>86</sup> A statute providing for service on an agent of a nonresident partnership does not permit such service on the agent of a partnership any member of which is a resident.<sup>87</sup> Where the statutes provide for service at defendant's place of business by leaving a copy with one in charge, where defendant's residence cannot be found, or is outside the jurisdiction, inquiry must be made at the place of business as to residence in the county before process can be left with such person.<sup>88</sup> A statute providing for service on the agent of a nonresident doing business in the state applies with equal force to a nonresident sued on a contract entered into at a time when he was a resident of the state.<sup>89</sup>

Attorneys. Under a statute to such effect, service of process may be made on the attorney of defendant,<sup>90</sup> provided defendant has already appeared in the action or has otherwise come personally within the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>91</sup> but an attorney who does not represent defendant cannot be so served;<sup>92</sup> and it has been held that or-the principal, regardless of whether the agency at time of the service of process has or has not been terminated.—Hartsock v. Commodity Credit Corp., D.C.Iowa, 10 F.R.D. 181.

N.Y.—Interchemical Corp. v. Mirabelli, 54 N.Y.S.2d 522, 269 App.Div. 224.

Test

Statute relating to service of summons on nonresidents doing business within the state was not intended to apply only in favor of such persons as are in a contractual relationship to, or in privity with, a nonresident, and sole test of applicability of statute is whether cause of action, whether based on tort or contract, arises out of the conduct of the business of the nonresident.—Miller v. Swann, 28 N.Y.S.2d 247, 176 Misc. 607.

Cause of action held to arise out of business

Cause of action in favor of lodger in house leased by nonresident owners to a tenant, for injuries sustained as a result of fire allegedly caused by owners' negligence, was one arising out of business of the owners, within statute relating to service of summons on nonresidents doing business in the state in any action arising out of such business, since it was an incident of ownership, operation, and management of owners' realty that lodger was injured.—Miller v. Swann, supra.

Cause of action held not to arise out of business

Substituted service of process purportedly effected on nonresident individual defendants by leaving a copy of summons and complaint with a person in charge of defendants' factory in the state was invalid, where action was for goods sold and delivered to defendants in another state, and the action did not arise out of business in which defendants were engaging in the state.—Interchemical Corp. v. Mirabelli, 54 N.Y.S.2d 522, 269 App.Div. 224.

83. Mich.—John W. Masury & Son v. Lowther, 300 N.W. 866, 299 Mich. 516.

Antagonistic interest of representative

Where one occupies a fiduciary or representative relation to a person or subject matter to be affected by proceeding in which such person has a personal interest antagonistic to interest of others represented by him, service of process on representative confers no jurisdiction, even though statute expressly provides for such service.—John W. Masury & Son v. Lowther, supra.

Plaintiff as defendant's agent

An official, instigating suit to recover money which it is his duty to collect, cannot be real plaintiff and defendant's representative, agent, or attorney in fact, on whom process may be served, at same time.—Baird-Gatzmer Corp. v. Henry Clay Coal Min. Co., 50 S.E.2d 673, 131 W. Va. 793.

84. Iowa.—Murphy v. Albany Pecan Dev. Co., 151 N.W. 500, 169 Iowa 542.

90. Me.—Nelson v. Omaley, 6 Me. 218.

Attorney's clerk

Under a statute providing for service of notice and other papers on a clerk, in the absence of the attorney for a litigant, it may be presumed that a stenographer, who was in charge of an attorney's office, was the clerk of the attorney.—Peter v. Kalez, 83 P. 526, 11 Idaho 553.

91. Cal.—Reynolds v. Reynolds, 134 P.2d 251, 21 Cal.2d 530.

Attorney of record; change of attorney

An attorney of record on whom service of papers may be made for a nonresident party is the person the client has named as his agent on whom service of papers may be made; and, in determining whether service of papers on a party's attorney of record to a proceeding binds the party, trial court is concerned, not with whether the party is represented by attorney but whether he has an attorney of record, whether change in attorneys has been made, and whether notice thereof has been given.—Reynolds v. Reynolds, supra.

Interveners

Interveners cannot be served with citation through their attorney of record under statute providing that after suit is brought and defendant appears through counsel, service of other process, including supplemental petitions, may be made on attorney of record.—Adams v. Ross Amusement Co., 161 So. 601, 182 La. 252.

92. Mass.—Kimball v. Sweet, 51 N. E. 116, 170 Mass. 538.

50 C.J. p 495 note 61.

"Disabled" attorney

Attorneys discharged by plaintiff were "disabled" within statute staying further proceedings after attor-

dinarily where an attorney represents a client as to a particular matter service on the attorney in unrelated proceedings will not constitute service on the client.<sup>93</sup> It has been held that such a statute, being in derogation of the usual methods of service, should be limited to cases coming clearly within it.<sup>94</sup> Where it is provided by statute that, in case of a cross bill, process and copies shall be issued and served on all material cross defendants named therein, it has been held that substituted service on complainant's attorney in defendant's cross action is permissible only because of necessity when complainant cannot be reached.<sup>95</sup>

Partnership as agent. Where the agent is a partnership, service on one of the partners is sufficient.<sup>96</sup>

Service on assistant of agent, where assistant is in actual control, has been held to be good.<sup>97</sup>

Retroactive operation. A statute providing that certain nonresidents who do business or perform work in the state shall be deemed to have appointed the secretary of state as agent to receive process in any action arising out of such doing of business or performance of work is unconstitutional if, or to the extent that, it is made retroactive.<sup>98</sup>

ney had become disabled, until giving of certain notice, and attorneys could not thereafter appear for or represent plaintiff, and no papers or process could be served on them, but papers in the action could be personally served on litigants.—Thomas v. Thomas, 84 N.Y.S.2d 320, 178 Misc. 349.

Informal withdrawal

Where conditional sellers obtained judgment for balance due on contract and execution was stayed in consideration of further payments, sellers were not entitled to serve buyers' counsel of record and obtain default judgment for failure to comply with the stay order, notwithstanding he had not formally withdrawn as counsel of record, where he had informed the sellers' attorney before service that he no longer represented the buyers and sellers' attorney represented that service would be had otherwise.—Chamberlain v. Bruce Furniture Co., La.App., 35 So.2d 267.

93. Wash.—State v. Superior Court of Skagit County, 292 P. 1011, 159 Wash. 277.

94. La.—Chamberlain v. Bruce Furniture Co., 35 So.2d 267.

Service outside state

The statute providing for service on an attorney, during absence of attorney from his office, to be made by leaving notice with clerk in office, refers only to service within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which litigation is pending, and it does not permit service on an attorney outside the state of a notice required in litigation pending in such state.—Zeig v. Zeig, 198 P.2d 724, 65 Nev. 464.

98. Ark.—Gillioz v. Kincannon, 214 S.W.2d 212, 213 Ark. 1010.

Accrual date of cause governs

Statute providing that, when a nonresident conducts a business within the state by an agent, nonresident may be sued on any action arising out of conduct of such business, and summons may be served on nonresident or on agent, was not unconstitutional as to particular nonresident who entered into a contract with a resident prior to effective date of statute, where nonresident continued to transact business within the state after the act took effect and alleged breach of contract, on which nonresident was sued, took

§ 51. Posting and Mailing

Under some statutes substituted service may in a proper case be effected by posting a copy of the process at some prominent place about the defendant's residence, or by such posting together with mailing, or by mailing without posting.

Under some statutes substituted service may in a proper case be effected by posting a copy of the process at some prominent place about the residence when it is impossible to leave it with a proper person,<sup>99</sup> and in order to confer jurisdiction there must be strict compliance with such statute.<sup>1</sup> Where the statute so requires, the copy must be posted at defendant's usual place of abode;<sup>2</sup> and the requirement is not satisfied by leaving the copy at a former place of abode from which defendant has in good faith removed.<sup>3</sup> Some statutes providing for the posting of process further require that a copy be mailed to defendant, and such requirement must be observed.<sup>4</sup> Mailing without having posted is likewise invalid service.<sup>5</sup>

Mailing apart from provisions as to posting and mailing. Statutory provisions for service by mail of notices, pleading, or other papers have been held inapplicable to the service of original process.<sup>6</sup> However, under a statute providing therefor, substituted service may be made by mailing,<sup>7</sup> some-

99. Miss.—Sellers v. Powell, 152 So. 492, 168 Miss. 682.

Sufficiency of affixing

Binding summons and order with rubber band and twisting band around doorknob amounted to "affixing" thereof to door so as to constitute substituted service.—Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Trenton v. Newman, 244 N.Y.S. 529, 137 Misc. 587, reversed by memorandum decision 244 N.Y.S. 901, 230 App.Div. 833.

times in conjunction with other forms of substituted service,<sup>8</sup> but service by mailing is proper only in cases in which such service is specifically authorized<sup>9</sup> and the statute is strictly complied with,<sup>10</sup> and provided under the circumstances it is reasonably calculated to give defendant notice of the pending action and an opportunity to be heard.<sup>11</sup> Under rules or provisions to such effect, service by mailing is complete three days after the mailing unless the process is received sooner.<sup>12</sup> A statute authorizing substituted service by registered mail does not authorize such service by mail on a resident of the state outside the state.<sup>13</sup> It has been held that where a paper, directed by a court which already has jurisdiction of the action and the parties to be served by mail, actually comes into the hands of the person to be served within the time required for personal service the place of mailing is immaterial.<sup>14</sup> In the absence of statutory authority, mailing of a copy of the summons and complaint to defendant's attorneys is ineffective as service.<sup>15</sup>

§ 52. Order for Substitution Service

In some jurisdictions substituted service is effective only when made pursuant to court order; such order should direct that service be made in the manner provided by statute.

In some jurisdictions substituted service can be made only when authorized by the court;<sup>16</sup> and the court's order may be made without notice.<sup>17</sup> Such an order is not an order granting a provisional remedy.<sup>18</sup> The order must direct that service be made in the manner provided by the statute.<sup>19</sup> Where the statute provides for filing the order for substituted service within a certain time prior to the return day of the summons, the court obtains no jurisdiction where the order is not so filed,<sup>20</sup> and, where the statute so requires, the order must be served with the process.<sup>21</sup>

§ 53. — Application or Affidavit for Order

Under statutes to such effect, a court order directing substituted service must be predicated on an affidavit setting forth the facts necessary to warrant such service.

Ohio.—Struble v. Meredith, 200 N.E. 194, 51 Ohio App. 201.

Pa.—Burd v. Bennett Transp. Co., Com.Pl., 20 Erie Co. 172, 52 York Leg.Rec. 87.—Leibensperger v. Leibensperger, Com.Pl., 20 Lehl.L. J. 102.

Venue not affected

The statute authorizing judges of the court of common pleas to provide by rule for service of writs or process by mail, registered or otherwise, relates only to the method of service and not to the venue of an action and provides merely another method of service.—Compton v. Compton, 23 N.E.2d 987, 62 Ohio App. 368.

Correctness of address

Attempted service by registered mail was ineffective where papers were refused, apparently in good faith, because addressed to "Frederick E. G.," when defendant's correct name was "Frank E. G."—New York Pattern Co. v. Galton, 275 N.Y.S. 178, 153 Misc. 424.

Place of deposit

8. Pa.—Wiest v. Heffernan, 17 Pa. Dist. & Co. 212.

9. D.C.—Craig v. Hell, Mun.App., 47 A.2d 871.

Parties residing "in different places"

Statute providing for service of papers in action by mail, where person making service and person served reside in different places between which there is mail communication, does not require that their places of residence be in different municipal subdivisions.—In re Callahan's Estate, 29 N.W.2d 352, 251 Wis. 247.

On nonresidents

Under statute providing that process in actions against nonresidents may be served in any county where they may be found, a defendant, who has always been a nonresident, must be found and served in person, as he can have no last or usual place of residence where he may be served by mailing.—Donnelley v. Thorne, 51 N.E.2d 873, 114 Ind.App. 468.

11. D.C.—Ellerbe v. Goldberg, Mun. App., 60 A.2d 232.

Service held invalid

Notice by registered mail delivered to wife of defendant, who was then serving in United States Army in time of war and who had been out of country for four months prior thereto, was not calculated to give reasonable notice or any notice to defendant, and attempted service was invalid and should have been quashed.—Ellerbe v. Goldberg, supra.

On complainant's attorney in defendant's cross action

A court order, allowing substituted service of process on complainant's attorney in defendant's cross action, must be made as preliminary to such a service, and such order or copy thereof must be served with process and copy of cross-bill.—Keicher v. Mysinger, 198 S.W.2d 330, 184 Tenn. 226.

Time of obtaining order

Fact that an order for substituted service was not obtained within the specified number of days after filing his pendens, as expressly required by statute, did not vitiate the service or affect the court's jurisdiction, whatever effect such delay might have on the lis pendens.—Hess v. Felt, 112 N.Y.S. 470, 60 Misc. 541.

21. Tenn.—Keicher v. Mysinger, 198 S.W.2d 330, 184 Tenn. 226.

Some statutes require that an order for substituted service be obtained from the court, on showing by affidavit that personal service cannot be made.<sup>22</sup> Depending on the particular statute, the affidavit should show that plaintiff has been or will be unable with due diligence to serve defendant personally,<sup>23</sup> that every means of effecting personal service has been exhausted,<sup>24</sup> or that defendant resided in or had his place of business in the state.<sup>25</sup> An order based on an affidavit which does not fully comply with the statute is bad.<sup>26</sup> A mere irregularity in the affidavit is not sufficient to render the process invalid.<sup>27</sup>

D. SERVICE BY PUBLICATION

§ 54. In General

Service of process by publication is a method provided by statute for giving constructive notice to defendant of the pendency of the suit against him. It is limited to cases where personal service may not reasonably and practicably be had, and is not permissible unless authorized by statute.

Service of process by publication is a method provided by statute for bringing in parties, where personal service cannot be had after the exercise of due diligence.<sup>28</sup> It is intended as a substitute for personal service,<sup>29</sup> and, although it is a recognized method of giving notice of a judicial proceeding,<sup>30</sup> and its purpose is to bring home, if possible, to the knowledge of defendant the pendency of the suit against him, and of the order to appear therein by a given date,<sup>31</sup> it gives constructive notice only.<sup>32</sup>

22. N.Y.—Haight v. Gates, 34 N.Y.S.2d 306, 263 App.Div. 1060.

23. N.Y.—Haight v. Gates, supra—Le Roy v. Squires, 50 N.Y.S.2d 576.

Inability to serve unverified complaint

An order, authorizing substituted service of summons on a resident defendant, which was entered on satisfactory showing of inability to serve defendant personally, was not rendered invalid by the fact that verification to the complaint was dated after the time of attempted personal service of summons and complaint as alleged in affidavit on which order was based, since the right to such order depends on inability to serve defendant personally, and civil practice act authorizes service of summons alone by substituted service, making service of the complaint superfluous as far as valid service and jurisdiction are concerned.—Nesi v. Heimann, 33 N.Y.S.2d 559, 178 Misc. 195.

Inability to find residence

Where substituted service of summons was made at defendant's place of business and not at his residence, and it did not appear in the affidavit that defendant's residence could not be found, service was void.—Weinstein v. Potashnikoff, 25 N.Y.S.2d 314.

Ignorance of defendant's place of sojourn

The requirement that plaintiff should show by his affidavit that defendant was a natural person and that the place of his sojourn could not be ascertained has been eliminated from the statute, and plaintiff's knowledge of defendant's whereabouts outside the state does not make the substituted service defective.—Nesi v. Heimann, 33 N.Y.S.2d 559, 178 Misc. 195.

Inability to find defendant

Under a former New York statute it was necessary, in order to warrant substituted service on a resident, to show that defendant could not be found within the state.—Nichols v. Emmett, 107 N.Y.S. 663, 56 Misc. 321—50 C.J. p 496 note 96.

Defendant's evasion of service

(1) Under an earlier New York statute it was essential, in order to justify substituted service on a resident, to show that defendant was evading personal service.—Nesi v. Heimann, 33 N.Y.S.2d 559, 178 Misc. 195—50 C.J. p 496 note 97.

(2) Statutory changes, however, have eliminated this requirement, and substituted service is not defective merely because plaintiff knew where defendant was outside the state and that he was not outside the state for the purpose of evading service.—Nesi v. Heimann, supra.

24. N.Y.—Wolter v. Liebmann, 102 N.Y.S. 487, 52 Misc. 517. 50 C.J. p 496 note 94.

Affidavit on printed form

Where affidavit of process server was incorporated in printed form except necessary insertions, such as names and dates, and related to conversations with alleged housekeeper of defendant, order for substituted service based thereon and default judgment would be set aside where defendant promptly applied for relief.—Katz v. Silverberg, 50 N.Y.S.2d 83, 183 Misc. 492.

Substituted service by leaving copy of process at residence or place of business distinguished see supra § 43.

Service of process by publication is harsh and technical substitute for personal service.—Quattrochi v. Quattrochi, Mo.App., 179 S.W.2d 757—50 C.J. p 498 note 18 [a].

Miserable substitute

Notice by publication is, at best, but a miserable substitute for personal service.—Edrington v. Allsbroughs, 21 Tex. 189—Parker v. Scobee, Tex.Civ.App., 36 S.W.2d 303.

Purposes for which substitution intended

Notice given to absent defendant, on whom no personal service has been made, pursuant to statute authorizing court, on plaintiff's suggestion, to continue action until notice is given as ordered by court, is intended as substitute for service of original writ for all purposes where it can have that effect consistently with federal Constitution, controlling principles of international comity, and other statutes.—Taplin v. Atwater, 8 N.E.2d 786, 297 Mass. 302.

30. Mass.—Young v. Tudor, 83 N.E.2d 1, 323 Mass. 508.

Purpose of authorizing statutes see infra § 55.

32. Ala.—Corpus Juris quoted in

It was unknown at common law,<sup>33</sup> is of comparatively recent<sup>34</sup> and strictly statutory<sup>35</sup> origin, and is not permissible unless authorized by statute.<sup>36</sup> However, as judicially noted, statutes exist in practically all jurisdictions which authorize service of process by publication in designated cases where personal service cannot be had,<sup>37</sup> and, when all the statutory requirements have been complied with, service by publication must be deemed a complete and sufficient service of process,<sup>38</sup> and in cases falling within the purview of the statute service by publication has been said to be as effective as personal service.<sup>39</sup>

Necessity. Service of process by publication is limited strictly to cases of necessity<sup>40</sup> and is never permissible where personal service is practicable,<sup>41</sup> even though personal service is difficult to obtain.<sup>42</sup>

Jurisdiction

(1) In cases falling within the purview of the statute, and where it is strictly complied with, a court of general jurisdiction in the classes of cases mentioned in the statute obtains as much jurisdiction over the persons of nonresidents on a publication regularly made as if they were personally served with process.—Shemwell v. Betts, 174 S. W. 390, 264 Mo. 268—50 C.J. p 497 note 15.

(2) Acquisition of jurisdiction of defendants for partition purposes see Partition § 83 a.

Basis of subsequent proceedings

(1) Where trial court has jurisdiction over justiciable subject matter which is under control of defendant nonresidents and statutes authorize constructive service of process in suit, which process as issued and served affords due process of law to defendants, the court may proceed in the cause and the property duly involved and within jurisdiction of the court is subject to appropriate decrees in the cause pending final adjudication.—Gribbel v. Henderson, 10 So.2d 734, 151 Fla. 712, affirmed 14 So.2d 809, 153 Fla. 397.

Fraud

Securing of service of process by publication notwithstanding knowledge of adverse party's whereabouts is repugnant to court of equity and of itself gives a taint of suspicion and fraud to the cause of any party who employs it.—Croyle v. Croyle, 40 A.2d 374, 184 Md. 126.

The purpose of statutes authorizing service of process by publication is to give defendants notice that an action against them is pending and an opportunity to come to court and make their defense.<sup>43</sup> Inasmuch as service of process by publication is in derogation of the common law, the statutes authorizing it are subject to strict construction<sup>44</sup> and must be strictly,<sup>45</sup> literally,<sup>46</sup> and fully<sup>47</sup> complied with in order to render such service valid<sup>48</sup> and give the court jurisdiction<sup>49</sup> of defendant.<sup>50</sup> Every step required to be taken by the statute is essential to the validity of the service<sup>51</sup> and, if any of the steps necessary to secure it are omitted, the court will not obtain jurisdiction over defendant to render judgment;<sup>52</sup> and this is so, although defendant may have had actual notice.<sup>53</sup> Furthermore, the method provided by statute for acquiring jurisdiction by constructive service must not only be strictly followed, but must be followed to the exclusion of any other method not also clearly provided.<sup>54</sup>

The rule requiring strict compliance, however, does not forbid interpretation, but is to be applied only after the meaning of the statute has been ascertained by interpretation.<sup>55</sup> Also, the strictness required by the principle of strict construction is reasonable,<sup>56</sup> and not strained or hypercritical<sup>57</sup> strictness; and a statute is not to be so construed as to make compliance therewith impossible.<sup>58</sup> According to some authorities, substantial compliance with the statute is necessary<sup>59</sup> and, in view of the objective of rules of civil procedure, one of such rules relating to citation by publication is not to be given a limited and narrow construction.<sup>60</sup>

Validity. Statutes providing for service of process by publication, where personal service cannot be had, and where such parties have property within the borders of the state, have very generally been sustained when assailed on constitutional grounds.<sup>61</sup> Nevertheless, the states are without power to enact legislation which authorizes a personal judgment against a nonresident defendant on service of process by publication.<sup>62</sup>

Operation; effect on other statutes. Statutes relating to service of process by publication will not be given a retrospective operation unless the wording of the statute clearly shows that to be the intention of the legislature.<sup>63</sup> A part of a statute relating to the making of rules is deemed to be permissive and not mandatory and not to require the promulgation of rules as a condition of operation of the statute.<sup>64</sup> A statute may be intended to reenact another law,<sup>65</sup> or to limit the force of pre-existing statutes only to a certain extent.<sup>66</sup>

Such a statute does not create a cause of action or fix venue, and it becomes operative only when suit is properly instituted in the county in which service by publication is sought.<sup>67</sup>

§ 56. Persons on Whom Service May Be Made

- a. In general
- b. Residents
- c. Nonresidents
- d. Unknown persons

a. In General

Only those persons who plainly come within the terms of an authorizing statute may be served with process by publication; but service by publication made valid and sufficient as to persons sui juris is also valid and sufficient as to persons under legal disability, unless the statute creates an exception in their favor.

Inasmuch as a statute authorizing service of process by publication is in derogation of common law, and is to be strictly construed, as discussed supra § 55, only those persons who plainly come within the terms of the statute may be served with process by publication,<sup>68</sup> and they must be either necessary or proper parties;<sup>69</sup> but service by publication made valid and sufficient by statute as to persons sui juris is also valid and sufficient as to persons non compos mentis, as discussed in Insane Persons § 147 b, infants, as considered in Infants § 115 b (2) (b), and persons under other legal disability,<sup>70</sup> unless the statute creates an exception in their favor.<sup>71</sup>

Service of process, by publication, on domestic corporations is discussed in Corporations § 1320, on foreign corporations, in Corporations § 1946 c, and on dissolved corporations, in Corporations § 1776.

Beneficiary of trust. Under a statute providing for service of summons by publication on defendants who claim an interest in the subject of the action, the beneficiary of a trust may be served by publication in an action brought by one of the trustees to have his duties determined;<sup>72</sup> and, under this statute, one appointed as a succeeding trustee of certain mortgage bonds and the person who has succeeded to the rights in such property after the termination of the trust have an interest in the trust property sufficient to authorize service by publication in a suit to determine the right to possession of the trust property.<sup>73</sup>

Transient persons. Under a statute authorizing service by publication on transient persons, it has been held that a woman who lived around over the state with her three or four children was not a "transient person," even though she had no fixed place of residence and could not properly call any of her children's homes her own.<sup>74</sup>

A resident of the state may be served with process by publication under some statutes and under the circumstances specified thereby, as where he has departed from, or conceals himself within, the state with intent to defraud creditors or to avoid service of process.

Under some statutes, and under some circumstances, process may be served by publication on a resident of the state,<sup>75</sup> as where the residence of defendant, although within the state, cannot be ascertained,<sup>76</sup> or where, after due diligence in searching for him, neither he nor any place of his residence at which service can be made can be found,<sup>77</sup> or where he is absent from the state,<sup>78</sup> or has departed from the state<sup>79</sup> with intent to defraud creditors,<sup>80</sup> or to avoid service of process,<sup>81</sup> or has concealed himself within the state with intent to defraud creditors,<sup>82</sup> or to avoid service of process,<sup>83</sup> or where process directed to the officer of the county in which defendant resides, or is, has been twice delivered to such officer more than ten days before the return day and has been returned without being executed;<sup>84</sup> but these statutes have no application and do not authorize service of process by publication, except where the facts enumerated by statute as grounds for service by publication are shown to exist;<sup>85</sup> and it has been held that service by publication in a case wherein rights of persons in property in the state are sought to be excluded is not sufficient as to residents of the state whose whereabouts are known.<sup>86</sup>

Service of process on a nonresident of the state may, under the statutes, be perfected by publication; but it has been held that the nonresident must have some property within the state and within the jurisdiction of the court.

Service of process on a nonresident of the state may, under the statutes, be perfected by publication<sup>87</sup> in certain classes of cases, as discussed infra § 57; but service by publication is ineffective to confer personal jurisdiction over a nonresident.<sup>88</sup> One who is but temporarily absent from the state in the pursuit of his vocation cannot be proceeded against as a nonresident;<sup>89</sup> nor can one be served as a nonresident merely because it cannot be ascertained where his residence is.<sup>90</sup> However, it has been held that one is a nonresident both in law and in fact within the meaning of statutes where he has been absent from the state for over a year and the time of his return to the state, if ever, is rendered uncertain by sickness,<sup>91</sup> and that the same principle applies to a person temporarily residing abroad in an official capacity under the United States government.<sup>92</sup> A person may be a nonresi-dent, for the purpose of constructive service by publication, where his actual present residence is without the state, although his legal domicile is in the state<sup>93</sup> and although in many cases the residence and domicile of a person on whom constructive service by publication is attempted may be the same.<sup>94</sup>

Occasional temporary presence of a nonresident within the state will not defeat the right to serve him by publication.<sup>95</sup>

Second publication on vacation of default order. The fact that a default had been entered on a publication of summons against a nonresident defendant does not render nugatory a subsequent publication, the default order having been vacated and new proceedings instituted for service.<sup>96</sup>

Ownership of property within jurisdiction. A rule frequently stated, and declared by some statutes, is that the nonresident must have some property within the state<sup>97</sup> and within the jurisdiction of the court<sup>98</sup> in order that service by publication on him may be proper and effective. A defendant, within the rule, does not have property within the state when it is merely brought temporarily into the state.<sup>99</sup>

The question of ownership of property within the state arises, in connection with service by publication, in a divorce action wherein there is an application for alimony, as discussed in Divorce § 247 b, or relief with respect to property is sought as incidental relief, as discussed in Divorce § 78, but it

50 C.J. p 501 note 66.

Nature of absence necessary

In order that absence from the state be sufficient ground for publishing summons under a statute authorizing service by publication when defendant has departed from the state, there must be a prolonged or protracted absence, amounting to a departure, as distinguished from a mere temporary absence.—Aronow v. Bishop, supra.

Person in military service

Service of citation by publication on ground of nonresidence of defendant in military service was sufficient as against contention that he did not lose residence in state because of such service, in absence of evidence conclusively establishing that he was resident of state when he entered service.—Reese v. Bacon, Tex.Civ.App., 176 S.W.2d 971.

seems not to arise where the only relief sought is dissolution of the marital status, as considered in Divorce § 95, and custody of children, in Divorce § 303 b.

d. Unknown Persons

Under an authorizing statute, unknown persons interested in the subject matter of the suit may be served with process by publication; but the persons sought to be so served must be in fact unknown.

Under a statute so providing, unknown heirs or other unknown persons interested in the property within the court's jurisdiction which is the subject matter of the suit may be served with process by publication.<sup>1</sup> However, in order to authorize such service, it must be made to appear that the parties sought to be served are in fact unknown.<sup>2</sup>

§ 57. Actions or Proceedings in Which Service Authorized

- a. In general
- b. Particular actions or proceedings.

a. In General

Service by publication may be had, when authorized by statute, in an action in rem, or quasi in rem, which involves a res in the state and within the jurisdiction of the court; but such service is not effective in an action in personam or in any action not within the purview of an authorizing statute.

Since service of process by publication was unknown at common law and is of strictly statutory origin, as discussed supra § 54, it is permissible only in the classes of actions that come within the purview of the statutes.<sup>3</sup> Where a statute, after specifically naming various classes of cases in which service by publication is authorized, uses very broad language to cover other cases, an action, although not within any one of the classes specifically named, may be within the broad language of the statute.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, some comprehensive statutes authorizing service by publication do not impose any limitation as to nature, class, or type of action,<sup>5</sup> and under such statutes service by publication may be had in all cases where the principles of due process do not require actual service within the state.<sup>6</sup>

The fact that the cause of action arose in the state is not alone sufficient to permit service by publication on a nonresident defendant.<sup>7</sup>

Actions in personam. Where suit is brought to determine a nonresident defendant's personal rights and obligations, that is, where the suit is purely in personam, service by publication is ineffectual for any purpose.<sup>8</sup> It has been held, however, that, although service by publication in this class of actions is ineffectual for any purpose, it is not objectionable and that an order for such service will not be vacated,<sup>9</sup> since defendant may appear in the action and thus cure all possible defects,<sup>10</sup> and, if he does not, he will sustain no injury because no personal judgment can be rendered against him.<sup>11</sup>

Actions or proceedings in rem or quasi in rem. When authorized by statute, service of process by publication may be had in an action or proceeding in rem, or quasi in rem, or in the nature of an action or proceeding in rem,<sup>12</sup> which involves a res in the state<sup>13</sup> and within the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>14</sup> Under the statutes, process may be served by publication where the action involves or affects specific real or personal property in the state and within the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>15</sup> defendant owns such property or has or claims an interest therein,<sup>16</sup> and the object of the suit is to enforce a right in the property<sup>17</sup> or to exclude defendant from any interest therein.<sup>18</sup>

Personal service required as to part of relief asked. If claims merely personal in their nature are joined with claims involving real estate, service cannot be had by publication so as to authorize judgment on the personal claims;<sup>19</sup> but the mere fact that a party asks a greater measure of relief than can be given without personal service does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to grant such relief as is proper under service by publication.<sup>20</sup>

b. Particular Actions or Proceedings

Service by publication has been considered permissible in various actions, such as an action to enforce a lien, to reform an instrument, or to set aside a conveyance or transfer of property, and not permissible in other actions of a different nature, such as a tort action or a suit for an injunction.

Particular actions or proceedings in which, according to the decisions, service by publication may be made in view of such actions being within statutes authorizing such service and being actions or proceedings in rem or quasi in rem, and not in personam, include: An action against a debtor to subject realty to payment of debts;<sup>21</sup> an action attacking a merger of corporations and involving disposition and restitution of assets;<sup>22</sup> an action by a state to recover money deposited by a prisoner with a sheriff in lieu of bail;<sup>23</sup> an action for an accounting in respect of an estate within the jurisdiction of the court;<sup>24</sup> an action for the recovery of a fund in the possession of a resident party, although claimed by a nonresident assignee;<sup>25</sup> an ac-

ment of a lien on real<sup>53</sup> or personal<sup>54</sup> property has very generally been held permissible under pertinent statutes; but a statute allowing service by publication in an action to enforce a lien does not authorize such service in an action to establish a lien.<sup>55</sup>

Action to set aside conveyance or transfer. Statutory authorization of service by publication is generally considered to extend to an action to set aside or cancel a conveyance of land,<sup>56</sup> a deed of trust,<sup>57</sup> a transfer of personal property,<sup>58</sup> or a transfer of land and personal property.<sup>59</sup> However, while it has been held that process may be served by publication in an action to cancel or set aside an assignment of a patent,<sup>60</sup> there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>61</sup>

Ancillary suit or proceeding; proceedings after judgment. Where a court has acquired jurisdiction over the person of a litigant and thereafter an ancillary suit or proceeding is instituted against him, constructive service of process is sufficient;<sup>62</sup> but a statute allowing service by publication in an action or proceeding for relief after judgment does not relate to the modification of a judgment where the court has continuing jurisdiction of the subject matter and not of the person.<sup>63</sup> Service by publication has been held permissible in an action to set aside a judgment annulling a marriage on the ground of fraud,<sup>64</sup> and not permissible on a bill for discovery<sup>65</sup> or in a chancery suit for damages as a set-off against a judgment.<sup>66</sup>

§ 58. Prerequisites to Service by Publication

The due diligence which plaintiff must exercise to acquire certain information, specified by statute, before resorting to service by publication is an honest and reasonable effort to acquire such information; and the question of whether it has been exercised is largely a question of fact to be determined on consideration of the facts and circumstances of each case.

It is necessary, under the statutes, that plaintiff, before resorting to service by publication, exercise due diligence, or make due and diligent inquiry, to find defendant in the state, or ascertain his place of residence, or, if it is claimed that defendant is unknown, to ascertain his name and address;<sup>67</sup> and, under this rule, it is incumbent on him to make an honest,<sup>68</sup> conscientious,<sup>69</sup> reasonable,<sup>70</sup> and well directed<sup>71</sup> effort to acquire the information specified in the statute. Diligence, however, is a relative term,<sup>72</sup> and whether due diligence has been used is largely a question of fact<sup>73</sup> to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each case.<sup>74</sup> It is not necessary that extreme diligence<sup>75</sup> or that all possible or conceivable means<sup>76</sup> to ascertain the whereabouts of defendant should be used.

§ 59. — Control and Seizure of Defendant's Property by Court

The seizure or other subjection of some property of defendant to the control of the court, which is deemed essential in order to justify service of process on a nonresident defendant by publication, may, but need not, be by attachment; an injunction or receivership may be sufficient for this purpose.

It has been held or stated generally, without reference to an action, such as one for divorce, involving a personal status or relation, that, in order to justify service of process on a nonresident defendant by publication, not only must such defendant have property within the jurisdiction, as discussed supra § 56 c, but such property must be brought under the control of the court by attachment or other authorized and appropriate act or process,<sup>77</sup> and the judgment rendered is effective, in the absence of an appearance by defendant, only as to property within the court's jurisdiction which has been seized or otherwise brought within the control of the court.<sup>78</sup>

Time of acquisition of control. In some jurisdictions, service by publication prior to the attachment of the property or its seizure in some way is a nullity.<sup>79</sup> In other jurisdictions, jurisdiction is acquired by seizure of the property by attachment or otherwise at any time before rendition of judgment, and publication of process may be ordered before seizure of the property.<sup>80</sup> A statute providing for seizure of property to compel the appearance of a nonresident defendant has been construed to require the seizure to be made a sufficiently long time before appearance day to enable defendant to appear,<sup>81</sup> and has also been construed to make notice by publication mandatory.<sup>82</sup>

What acts sufficient to give control. While the general rule in regard to jurisdiction in rem requires the actual seizure and possession of the res by an officer of the court, such jurisdiction may be acquired by acts which are of equivalent import and which stand for and represent the dominion of the court over the thing, and, in effect, subject it to the control of the court.<sup>83</sup> The seizure or control of the property which will justify service by publication may,<sup>84</sup> but need not,<sup>85</sup> be by attachment.

Action on note

Attachment has been held necessary in action on note, where no personal service was had on defendant maker, residing in a foreign jurisdiction.—Milner v. Outcalt, Wash., 219 P.2d 982.

In New York

(1) A valid levy of a warrant of

Jurisdiction may be acquired by a writ of garnishment on a person holding a fund which is the subject of litigation, although the fund remains in the actual custody of one not an officer of the court.<sup>86</sup> Furthermore, while there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>87</sup> it has been held that an injunction restraining a resident debtor from payment of debts to a nonresident creditor,<sup>88</sup> or restraining a resident holding property for a nonresident from disposing of the property,<sup>89</sup> sufficiently brings the debts or property sought to be subjected to the payment of the debts sued for within the control of the court to authorize service of process by publication; and the same result was held to be reached by the appointment of a receiver to take charge of property specifically described in the complaint.<sup>90</sup> In a suit to enjoin as ultra vires the merger of a domestic and a foreign beneficiary association and to restrain the disposition of the assets of the resident association under such void contract, jurisdiction may be obtained of the nonresident association by publication of process where jurisdiction of the property of the associations has been obtained by impoundment thereof by injunction.<sup>91</sup>

It has been held that the mere joining as a party of a person having possession of a nonresident's property within the state, or holding the title to it in trust for him as a party to the action for the purpose of applying it in payment of the amount sued for, is a sufficient seizure of the property to authorize constructive service of process by publication;<sup>92</sup> and, where specific property is the subject of the action, it may effectively be brought under the control of the court by being described in a bill of chancery,<sup>93</sup> since the bringing of the suit in which the claim is sought to be enforced is in law equivalent to a seizure and the open and public exercise of dominion over the property for the purposes of the suit,<sup>94</sup> and actual seizure of the res in dispute is unnecessary;<sup>95</sup> but description of property in the complaint is not sufficient where the property so described is not the subject of the action.<sup>96</sup>

§ 60. — Return of "Not Found"

When so provided by statute, but not otherwise, summons must be issued and returned "not found" before resort may be had to service by publication.

While the issue of a summons and its return "not found" is not necessary if not made so by statute,<sup>97</sup> such issuance and return, when required by statute, must be made before resort may be had to service by publication.<sup>98</sup>

Where allegation that defendant is nonresident is made in the petition or affidavit, it is not necessary, under the law of some states, that summons be issued and returned "not found" before resorting to service by publication.<sup>99</sup>

Where there is a return of not found in the county, service by publication may, it seems, be had.<sup>1</sup>

attachment is necessary in order to render proper service by publication in an action against a nonresident to recover a sum of money only.—Mandl v. Mandl, 61 N.Y.S.2d 364, 187 Misc. 185.

(2) In other actions, an attachment is not necessary as a basis of service by publication.—Zeide v. Flexser, 25 N.Y.S.2d 610, 175 Misc. 911.

(3) No prior levy of attachment is necessary to support order of publication where defendant is resident of state at time.—Schaefer v. Fisher, 242 N.Y.S. 308, 137 Misc. 420.

(4) An improper and insufficient attachment levy is ineffective to confer jurisdiction to order service by publication.—Mackubin v. Gottlieb, 254 N.Y.S. 83, 234 App.Div. 49.—Goodale v. Central Greyhound Lines, 91 N.Y.S.2d 613, 196 Misc. 71, appeal dismissed 98 N.Y.S.2d 664.

1. Mo.—Hanna v. Sheetz, App., 205 S.W.2d 955.

Such a return has been held not insufficient for this purpose;<sup>2</sup> but there is some authority for the view that such a return, where nothing else appears, will not support service by publication.<sup>3</sup>

Time. A return of not found in order to form the foundation for publication must not be made until the time has expired within which personal service might be had, and the return of a summons "not found" before the return day is not sufficient to sustain an order for publication;<sup>4</sup> but publication need not take place at once thereafter, and an interim of several months between the return and the publication has been held not to affect the validity of the latter,<sup>5</sup> although an unreasonable and unexplained delay may destroy the right to resort to publication.<sup>6</sup>

§ 61. — Filing Bill, Declaration, Petition, or Complaint

The filing of a bill, petition, declaration, or complaint is or is not a prerequisite to the service of process by publication, or to the making of an order for publication, according as it is or is not made so by statute.

In the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, the filing of a bill, petition, declaration, or complaint is not a prerequisite to the service of process by publication;<sup>7</sup> but a statutory requirement that such a pleading must be filed before service of process by publication,<sup>8</sup> or before the making of an order for publication,<sup>9</sup> must be complied with.

Verification. In some jurisdictions the petition or complaint on which service by publication is ordered must be verified.<sup>10</sup> Where the verification is taken before a commissioner in another state, but is not sufficiently authenticated as required by law, it will not authorize an order of publication;<sup>11</sup> and a complaint verified before a person purporting to be a commissioner of deeds for the state, but using an insufficient seal, will not authorize an order of publication.<sup>12</sup>

§ 62. Application and Affidavit for Order of Publication

- a. In general
- b. Filing
- c. By whom made
- d. Before whom affidavit taken

a. In General

There should be a compliance with a statute or rule of civil procedure requiring an affidavit, stating certain facts, as a prerequisite to service by publication, and the affidavit should be made in good faith within the time prescribed.

A requirement, imposed by statute or rule of civil procedure, that as a prerequisite to service by publication an affidavit shall be made showing the existence of facts made necessary by the statutes or rules of civil procedure to authorize recourse to this method of service, is mandatory and must be complied with;<sup>13</sup> but under some statutes it has been held that the court, on suggestion of the requisite facts, may order service by publication.<sup>14</sup> Where a writ of summons has been returned unexecuted, an order of publication will not issue without request<sup>15</sup> or suggestion.<sup>16</sup>

Time of making affidavit. Under a statute requiring the affidavit to be "filed" after the return of the summons by the sheriff, it is not necessary that the affidavit be "made" after the return.<sup>17</sup> Where the affidavit is not made until twenty-one days after the return day of the summons, it has been held that the delay is fatal.<sup>18</sup>

18. Mich.—Union Guardian Trust

Under some statutes the affidavit must be made at or after the filing of a verified complaint,<sup>19</sup> and an affidavit is invalid as not complying with the statute where it is made a number of days before the institution of the action and the filing of a verified complaint.<sup>20</sup> The fact, however, that the affidavit was made one day before the filing of the petition and affidavit has been held not fatal, since the intervening time was not such as to cast suspicion on the verity of the affidavit or to authorize an inference that the facts stated in the affidavit had ceased to exist at the time of filing.<sup>21</sup>

Good faith. One seeking to avail himself of the statutory mode for constructive service must exercise good faith in making his affidavit for publication, and a willfully false affidavit is fraudulent.<sup>22</sup>

Presumptions on direct attack. No presumptions can be indulged to sustain the affidavit when directly attacked,<sup>23</sup> as is done in cases of collateral attack when there is sufficient stated to call into exercise the judicial mind.<sup>24</sup>

Pleading as substitute or aid generally. It has been held or stated that a verified petition or complaint which states all the facts made necessary by statute as a prerequisite to obtaining an order of service of process by publication is a sufficient substitute for, and dispenses with, the necessity of a separate affidavit showing these facts.<sup>25</sup>

In some jurisdictions it has been held without qualification that the affidavit for publication must contain and state all the statutory requirements, and that reference cannot be made to the complaint on file in the action for the purpose of supplying material facts omitted from the affidavit.<sup>26</sup> Elsewhere, however, it has been held that the affidavit may be aided by plaintiff's pleading where the petition or complaint is verified<sup>27</sup> and filed simultaneously with the affidavit;<sup>28</sup> and some decisions have held that it is not even necessary that the petition or complaint referred to should be verified.<sup>29</sup> Where the complaint is not referred to, or incorporated in, the affidavit, one view is that it cannot be considered for any purpose,<sup>30</sup> but there is also authority apparently to the contrary.<sup>31</sup>

b. Filing

An affidavit for service by publication is filed when it is deposited with the proper officer in his office. The filing must take place prior to the publication of process and at such time, in respect of other procedural steps, as is contemplated by the pertinent statute.

Depositing an affidavit for service of process by publication with the proper officer in his office constitutes a filing thereof.<sup>32</sup> Where the order for publication recites the filing of the affidavit, the fact that the date of filing was not indorsed on it at that time is of no consequence.<sup>33</sup> The presumption that an affidavit of nonresidence was never filed, arising from the clerk's failure to make a memorandum of such filing in the appearance docket, and the absence of such affidavit from the other papers in the case, are rebutted by positive testimony that such affidavit was made, that the clerk's office was carelessly conducted, and by a recital in the decree that service had been duly made by publication.<sup>34</sup>

Time. Under particular statutes, it has been held that the affidavit must be filed within a reasonable time after the making of the officer's return of "not found",<sup>35</sup> that a filing of the affidavit at or after the filing of a verified complaint is necessary<sup>36</sup> and permissible,<sup>37</sup> and that a filing of the affidavit after the making of an order for publication is not improper, provided the order remains in abeyance until the affidavit is filed.<sup>38</sup> In a number of jurisdictions, the statutes have been construed as making it an indispensable condition precedent that the affidavit be filed prior to the publication of process, and a noncompliance with this requirement renders the service void;<sup>39</sup> but in a few jurisdictions it has been held that it will be sufficient if the affidavit is filed when the action is called for trial<sup>40</sup> or even at the time of taking judgment.<sup>41</sup>

c. By Whom Made

It is necessary to comply with a statutory provision stating who shall make an affidavit for service by publication; but in the absence of express provision on the subject, the affidavit may be made by plaintiff, his attorney, or a disinterested stranger familiar with the facts; and where plaintiff is a corporation, the affidavit must of necessity be made by an agent.

Constructive service on a nonresident may be subject in all proceedings to the same rule as to who shall make the requisite affidavit.<sup>42</sup> Where the statute designates the person by whom an affidavit of service of process by publication shall be made, an affidavit made by anyone not so designated is invalid.<sup>43</sup> Where the statute makes no provision with respect to the matter, an affidavit by plaintiff,<sup>44</sup> or his attorney,<sup>45</sup> or by a disinterested stranger familiar with the facts,<sup>46</sup> is sufficient. No special statutory authorization is necessary to render an attorney competent to make the affidavit;<sup>47</sup> and it is held that he may make the affidavit.<sup>48</sup> Where the affidavit is made by plaintiff's attorney, it need not state that it was made in plaintiff's behalf in the absence of a statute so providing;<sup>49</sup> it must state why the affidavit was not made by plaintiff himself if the statute so requires,<sup>50</sup> but not otherwise.<sup>51</sup> An attorney making the affidavit need not set forth his knowledge, or grounds or means of knowledge,<sup>52</sup> except where this is required by statute.<sup>53</sup> An affidavit in which all the jurisdictional facts are positively stated and sworn to by plaintiff's attorney is not rendered insufficient by a recital that the affidavit was made by plaintiff, since it is manifest that the error is not prejudicial.<sup>54</sup>

Agent of corporation. Where a corporation is plaintiff, the affidavit must of necessity be made by an agent,<sup>55</sup> and although a statute requires the affidavit to be made by plaintiff, the agent of a corporation plaintiff may make such affidavit for it.<sup>56</sup> While an affidavit in behalf of a corporation made by one not shown to be its agent is insufficient,<sup>57</sup> a recital of agency in the affidavit is a sufficient showing of authority.<sup>58</sup>

The affidavit must be sworn to before an officer qualified to take affidavits.

The affidavit must be sworn to before an officer qualified to take affidavits;<sup>59</sup> otherwise, it gives no authority to the court to grant an order of publication.<sup>60</sup> An affidavit sworn to before plaintiff's attorney is absolutely void, although he is otherwise qualified to take affidavits, where a statute expressly prohibits him from taking an affidavit of a client,<sup>61</sup> and it has been held that this is true irrespective of any statutory prohibition;<sup>62</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>63</sup> An affidavit sworn to before an officer in another state is not insufficient merely on that account,<sup>64</sup> but it must be authenticated in accordance with the requirements of the statutes of the state in which the suit is pending.<sup>65</sup>

§ 63. — Form of Affidavit

Whether the affidavit must be entitled depends on whether a suit is pending when the affidavit is made. The want of a venue is not fatal.

If a suit is already pending in court, the affidavit must be entitled in that suit.<sup>66</sup> If no suit is pending at the time the affidavit is made it need not be entitled;<sup>67</sup> but it has been held that an affidavit is not invalidated by reason of the fact that it is entitled in a cause not yet commenced, and the view has been taken that this is at most a mere harmless irregularity.<sup>68</sup>

Venue. It is generally considered that the want of a venue is not fatal to the sufficiency of the affidavit;<sup>69</sup> but it has been held that an affidavit is fatally defective where it has no venue<sup>70</sup> and does not otherwise show where it was sworn to or whether the notary public was a resident of, or commissioned for, the county.<sup>71</sup>

Jurat. The fact that no jurat is attached thereto will not render the affidavit void, if it is otherwise shown that the oath was actually taken;<sup>72</sup> but an affidavit to which is attached an unsigned and undated jurat is not a sufficient basis for constructive service where no proof is offered that anyone authorized to take affidavits actually took the jurat and affixed his signature or seal.<sup>73</sup> The attaching of a seal is unnecessary where the officer authorized to take the affidavit has no seal of office.<sup>74</sup>

§ 64. — Statement of Facts Essential to Authorize Service by Publication

- a. In general
- b. Particular facts

a. In General

The affidavit or sworn statement which is filed to obtain service of process by publication should show every fact which is necessary under the statute to give the right to an order for such service; and it should state probative, rather than ultimate, facts.

The affidavit or sworn statement which is filed to obtain service of process by publication should show every fact which is necessary under the statute to give the right to an order for such service.<sup>75</sup> However, the affidavit or sworn statement need show no facts other than those which are required by the statute<sup>76</sup> and are essential in, and appropriate to, the particular case.<sup>77</sup> Defects in the statement of facts not made necessary by statute

What are essential matters determinable as question of law

Fla.—Gribbel v. Henderson, 10 So.2d 734, 151 Fla. 712, reheard 14 So.2d 809, 153 Fla. 397.

In case of doubt or where portions of the matters required by statute are not plainly inapplicable or immaterial, it is better and safer practice to include in the sworn statement all of the matters required by statute in the class of cases involved, unless this course will cause repugnancy in material statements; and this is so even though such inclusion may cause some duplications of statements or some apparent but may be disregarded as surplusage, and will not vitiate an otherwise sufficient affidavit.<sup>78</sup> Also, where two affidavits are filed, a sufficient one by plaintiff and an insufficient one by his attorney, the latter may be disregarded as surplusage.<sup>79</sup> Furthermore, clerical<sup>80</sup> or other<sup>81</sup> errors in stating necessary facts, which are manifestly not prejudicial, will not vitiate the affidavit; and it has been held that, where there is not an entire omission to state some fact made necessary by statute, but it is insufficiently set forth, the proceedings are not void, but merely voidable,<sup>82</sup> and a judgment thereon is not subject to collateral attack, as discussed in Judgments § 422 c.

Statement of one or more grounds. Where the grounds for service of process by publication are stated disjunctively in the statute providing for such service, it is necessary<sup>84</sup> and sufficient<sup>85</sup> for the affidavit to state any one of these causes or the affidavit may state two or more of such statutory causes for publication in the disjunctive;<sup>86</sup> and if one ground is sufficiently shown, the insufficient statement of an additional ground will not vitiate the affidavit;<sup>87</sup> but where the facts necessary to be stated for the issuance of an order for publication on two grounds enumerated by statute are inconsistent and contradictory, an affidavit which states facts entitling plaintiff to an order for publication based on both grounds is insufficient, and an order for publication issued thereon is invalid.<sup>88</sup>

Statement of ultimate or probative facts; following language of statute. Where all the necessary facts are stated, it is not necessary that the affidavit should follow the language of the statute.<sup>89</sup> Indeed, it is a general rule that a mere allegation of the ultimate facts prescribed by statute as a prerequisite to the allowance of an order for service of process by publication is insufficient, and that the probative facts on which the ultimate facts required by statute depend must be set forth so that the court may judge of the propriety of granting the order.<sup>90</sup> However, under a few statutes, it has been held that it is not necessary that the affidavit should state the probative facts, but it will be sufficient to state the ultimate facts in the language of the statute.<sup>91</sup>

Definite or inferential statement. As in the case of an affidavit generally, as discussed in affidavits § 18, one test of the sufficiency of an affidavit for service by publication is whether it is so clear and certain that, if it is false, an indictment for perjury may be sustained.<sup>92</sup> However, while there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>93</sup> it has generally been held that, where an affidavit inferentially states all the material facts required by the statute, it is not void, but at most only voidable.<sup>94</sup>

Statements on information and belief generally. It has been held that the affidavit need not rest on personal knowledge of the facts, but may be made on information and belief and need not state the source of affiant's knowledge or information.<sup>95</sup> It has also been held, however, that an affidavit is insufficient where all statements therein relating to diligence are hearsay and based on information obtained from another person.<sup>96</sup>

Sufficiency to confer jurisdiction. Where there is a total want of evidence of any fact, the existence of which is by statute made essential to authorize service of process by publication, there is nothing on which the court is authorized to act, and it acquires no jurisdiction to make the order;<sup>97</sup> but in order to authorize an order of publication, it is not essential that the evidence presented by the affidavit should conclusively establish the right to the order.<sup>98</sup> Evidence, even though slight and inconclusive, if sufficient to call for judicial judgment, will be sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court granting the application.<sup>99</sup> In order to defeat the jurisdiction there must be a total want of evidence on some essential point.<sup>1</sup>

(1) Cause and Nature of Action

(b) Action in which publication authorized

(a) In General

A statute making it a prerequisite to the granting of an order for publication of process that the affidavit or verified complaint show the existence of a cause of action in favor of plaintiff against defendant must be complied with by setting out the facts on which the alleged cause of action is founded.

Statutes which make it an indispensable prerequisite to the granting of an order for publication of process that the affidavit or verified complaint shall show the existence of a cause of action in favor of plaintiff and against defendant are mandatory, and must be complied with;<sup>2</sup> and, in the absence of such a showing, it is immaterial whether or not the subject matter of the suit is properly within the jurisdiction of the court because the existence of that fact alone would not authorize a notice by publication.<sup>3</sup> Under other statutes, the affidavit need not show a cause of action in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, since it is enough if the affidavit contains a statement of the nature of the action sufficient to show that it is one in which the statute authorizes service of process by publication,<sup>4</sup> and to inform defendant as to the nature of the suit against him which he is required to defend.<sup>5</sup> In the absence of statutory requirement, the affidavit need not state whether the action is in rem or in personam or what kind of action it is.<sup>6</sup>

The requirement that a cause of action be stated, for the purpose of obtaining an order for service by publication, is complied with by a verified complaint which states a cause of action<sup>7</sup> or, in some jurisdictions, by an affidavit which refers to and adopts a verified<sup>8</sup> or unverified<sup>9</sup> complaint stating a cause of action; but an affidavit which describes, as the basis of the action, a cause of action different from the one alleged in the complaint cannot be made the basis for an order of publication, and in such case the order for publication, and publication of summons under such order, are void, and ineffectual to give an absent defendant constructive notice of the pendency of the action.<sup>10</sup> It is not sufficient to state generally that a cause of action exists in favor of plaintiff and against defendant,<sup>11</sup> but the facts on which the alleged cause of action is founded must be set out<sup>12</sup> so that the court can see and determine that a cause of action exists.<sup>13</sup> Under a statute requiring the order of publication to be founded on a verified complaint showing a sufficient cause of action against the defendant to be served, the complaint must be sufficient to justify the prayer for judgment<sup>14</sup> and show that the cause of action is one of which the court can take cognizance.<sup>15</sup> In a few jurisdictions, it must be shown either that the cause of action arose within the state or that defendant has property therein.<sup>16</sup>

A statement on information and belief that plaintiff has a cause of action against defendant has been held sufficient,<sup>17</sup> but has also been held insufficient.<sup>18</sup>

Subject of action. The decisions as to what constitutes "the subject of the action" in statutes which require the affidavit to state that the court has jurisdiction of "the subject of the action" are not harmonious.<sup>19</sup>

(b) Action in Which Publication Authorized

In order to comply with a requirement that the affidavit show that the action is one of those enumerated by the statute authorizing service of process by publication, it is necessary to state facts showing that the action is one of those enumerated in the statute; and it is neither necessary nor sufficient to state the conclusion of law that the action is within the statute.

Under statutes requiring the affidavit to show that the action is one of those enumerated by the statute authorizing service of process by publication, an affidavit which fails to meet this requirement is fatally defective, and service of process by publication cannot be obtained thereon.<sup>20</sup> It is neither necessary<sup>21</sup> nor sufficient<sup>22</sup> to allege in terms that the action is one of those enumerated in the statute authorizing service of process by publication, since this is a mere conclusion of law, but the affidavit must state facts showing that the action is one in which the statute authorizes service of this kind.<sup>23</sup> It has been held, however, that if there is not an entire omission to state facts showing that the action is one in which constructive service is authorized, but merely an imperfect statement of such facts, the proceedings are voidable and not void.<sup>24</sup>

In order that service by publication may be effective, cause of action must be stated with such clearness as to enable court to determine its sufficiency.—Martin v. Martin, 170 S.E. 661, 205 N.C. 157.

Affidavit addressed to clerk of court

Where the affidavit is addressed to and acted on exclusively by the clerk of court, it has been held necessary, in order to comply with the requirement under consideration, that the affidavit state only that plaintiff has a cause of action against defendant so as to inform the clerk of that fact, and the affidavit need not specifically set forth the cause of action.—Calvert v. #### 19. Controversy between parties

The words "subject of the action" have been held to relate to the controversy between the parties, and not property of defendant which has previously been seized on attachment.—Hartzell v. Vigan, 69 N.W. 203, 6 N.D. 117, 66 Am.S.R. 589, 35 L.R.A. 451, applying Minnesota law.

Property

It has been held that "subject of the action" is not identical with "cause of action," since the former phrase is held to relate to the property or thing concerning which the proceeding is instituted and carried on, and the changes to be effected by it.—McKinney v. Collins, 88 N.Y. 216.

complaint, where the name of the person to be served is unknown to plaintiff, to describe his interest in the subject matter of the suit.

Where applicable, a statute imposing an alternative requirement that the affidavit or verified complaint show that the person sought to be served by publication is a necessary or proper party to the action is accorded effect;<sup>25</sup> and under some statutes the probative facts to establish this averment must be stated;<sup>26</sup> but it has been held that, where the statute merely requires that the affidavit should "state" that defendant is a necessary or proper party, a statement of the ultimate fact is sufficient, without setting forth facts which show why and how he is a necessary or proper party,<sup>27</sup> and that, where by statute the affidavit is to be acted on exclusively by the clerk, instead of the court, the affidavit need only allege that defendant is a necessary party to the action.<sup>28</sup> A statement on information and belief that defendant is a necessary party has been held sufficient.<sup>29</sup>

Under a statute which authorizes service of process by publication on "a defendant" under circumstances therein designated, the affidavit, in order to warrant the issuance of an order of publication, must show in some way that the party against whom the order is sought is a defendant to the suit in which the order is to issue.<sup>30</sup>

Interests of parties. An affidavit to obtain an order for service by publication on the ground that defendant is a nonresident so that plaintiff is unable to procure personal service need not show the interests of the parties in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect.<sup>31</sup> Where service by publication on unknown persons who have an interest in the subject matter of the suit is sought, such interest must be described in the petition or complaint where the statute so provides.<sup>32</sup>

(3) Name and Age of Defendant or Ignorance Thereof

The name of the person to be served must be stated in the affidavit or pleading unless it is unknown, in which case it is necessary to allege that fact and, if so required by statute, that due diligence to ascertain the name has been exercised.

Unless the person against whom service of process by publication is asked is an unknown person interested in the subject matter of the suit, the person against whom such service is asked must be named in the affidavit.<sup>33</sup>

In order to authorize service of process by publication on unknown persons interested in the subject matter of the suit, the proper allegation must be made by affidavit,<sup>34</sup> or by bill, petition, or complaint,<sup>35</sup> or by either bill or affidavit,<sup>36</sup> according as the statute may provide. It must be alleged that the names of such persons are unknown to plaintiff or to affiant,<sup>37</sup> and, if the statute so provides, that due diligence has been exercised to ascertain their names;<sup>38</sup> but, in the absence of statutory requirement, it need not be stated that, on diligent inquiry, the names of the parties could not be ascertained.<sup>39</sup>

Where the affidavit contains a positive and direct statement that the owner of land in suit is unknown; the further statement that affiant believes this to be true does not qualify or detract from the first statement or render the affidavit insufficient;<sup>40</sup> and where an affidavit made by plaintiff's attorney states positively, and not on information and belief, that he knows that the names of the heirs and next of kin of a person named are unknown to plaintiff, it will be presumed that these facts were within the knowledge of affiant.<sup>41</sup> Where the affidavit is more specific in the description of un-

Ultimate fact

It has been said that if the affidavit or sworn pleading states that the persons sued as unknown defendants are in fact unknown, it is sufficient, but, where diligence is unnecessarily alleged, it is only necessary to allege ultimate fact of diligence and not particular acts constituting such diligence.—Campbell v. Doherty, 206 P.2d 1145, 53 N.M. 280, 9 A.L.R.2d 699.

known persons than is required by statute, the unnecessary description is surplusage and does not vitiate the affidavit.<sup>42</sup>

Defects in an affidavit become immaterial where there was a stipulation in the suit that it did not appear from the chain of title to the premises involved that there were persons interested in them whose names were unknown.<sup>43</sup>

Age. An inferential statement of the age of the person to be served is a substantial compliance with the intent of a statute making a requirement as to statement of age.<sup>44</sup> Where the sworn bill of complaint shows that defendant is, or has been, lawfully married, an allegation of his age is unnecessary and immaterial.<sup>45</sup>

(4) Post-Office Address or Place of Residence or Ignorance Thereof

(a) Place of residence or ignorance thereof

(b) Post-office address or ignorance thereof

(a) Place of Residence or Ignorance Thereof

Under some statutes it is necessary that the affidavit state defendant's residence or that such residence is unknown to affiant. The place of defendant's residence may be stated on information and belief; but where such residence is stated to be unknown to affiant, it is necessary, under some statutes, to state probative facts showing due diligence to ascertain such residence.

It has been held unnecessary to allege where a nonresident defendant resides, in the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect;<sup>46</sup> but it has also been considered that a failure to state where defendant actually resides is an omission of an evidentiary fact necessary to show the ultimate fact of nonresidence;<sup>47</sup> and, in a number of jurisdictions, the statutes have been construed as requiring the affidavit to state defendant's residence, if known to affiant, or to state that his residence is unknown to affiant if such is the case,<sup>48</sup> or to state that defendant is a resident of another state or country, specifying his place of residence as particularly as may be known to affiant, or stating that it is unknown.<sup>49</sup> An affidavit which fails to comply with these requirements has been held to be fatally defective.<sup>50</sup> The requirements of the statutes are not satisfied by an affidavit stating "that the last post-office address of defendant is unknown,"<sup>51</sup> that the "whereabouts" of defendant are unknown,<sup>52</sup> that the present post-office address of defendant is outside of the state,<sup>53</sup> or that defendant resides in a designated county in another state but that affiant does not know and is unable to ascertain the particular place of residence or post-office address of defendant.<sup>54</sup> Also, an affidavit which, after alleging that the post-office address of defendant is unknown, makes the conflicting statement that affiant has been informed that the post-office address is, or will be, a designated city in another state is insufficient,<sup>55</sup> as is also an affidavit which affirmatively shows that the residence of heirs is in a designated city, and, in place of a statement that the residence is unknown, states that their address is unknown.<sup>56</sup>

On the other hand, it has been held sufficient to state that defendant resides in a designated town or city without stating the street and number,<sup>57</sup> provided such town or city is a small one<sup>58</sup> or it is alleged that the residence is specified as particularly as is known to affiant.<sup>59</sup> Also, an allegation that plaintiff is "unable to find either the residence or post-office addresses of defendants" is equivalent to

Substantial compliance with statute; business address as surplusage

Where bill alleged that defendant lived in Chicago and that no more particular residence was known, there was substantial compliance with statute relating to process and added statement giving defendant's business address as particularly as known to plaintiff was surplusage.—Seiton v. Miami Roofing & Sheet Metal, 10 So.2d 428, 151 Fla. 631.

stating that the place of their residence is unknown and is sufficient;<sup>60</sup> and an affidavit complying literally with the requirements of the statute is sufficient.<sup>61</sup>

Information and belief. It has very generally been held that the place of defendant's residence may be stated on information and belief.<sup>62</sup> It has also been held that it is not indispensable to state the source of affiant's information and belief,<sup>63</sup> although the better practice would be to state the source from which the information is derived.<sup>64</sup>

Diligence to ascertain residence. Some statutes, in addition to requiring a statement of defendant's residence or an allegation that it is not known to affiant, require, or have been construed to require, that the affidavit shall also show that the residence of defendant could not, on the exercise of due diligence, be ascertained, where it is alleged that defendant's residence is unknown to affiant,<sup>65</sup> and the probative facts which show the exercise of due diligence must be stated, since it is not sufficient merely to follow the language of the statute;<sup>66</sup> but, in some jurisdictions, the affidavit need contain only the language of the statute or its equivalent with respect to diligence;<sup>67</sup> and, where the statute does not mention diligence, it has been held that the affidavit need not show what efforts affiant made to ascertain defendant's residence.<sup>68</sup>

(b) Post-Office Address or Ignorance Thereof

The existence or absence of statutory requirement is determinative of whether or not it is necessary that the affidavit state the defendant's post-office address or that it is unknown to affiant.

In the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, it has been held that an affidavit for service of process by publication need not state the post-office address of defendant.<sup>69</sup> Some statutes, however, require the affidavit to state defendant's post-office address or that it is unknown to affiant, and a noncompliance with this requirement renders the affidavit fatally defective,<sup>70</sup> and an order of publication based thereon,<sup>71</sup> or a decree based on such order,<sup>72</sup> is void. The statutory requirement is not satisfied by a statement that defendant's place of residence is unknown.<sup>73</sup>

Information and belief. An affidavit alleging defendant's nonresidence and stating his post-office address on information and belief has been held sufficient.<sup>74</sup>

(5) Nonresidence

If service by publication is sought on the ground that the defendant is a nonresident, an averment of the fact of such nonresidence must be made in the affidavit or, where it is permissible under the statutes to show this fact in the plaintiff's pleading, either in the affidavit or such pleading.

While the contrary has been held,<sup>75</sup> the general rule is that, if service by publication is sought on the ground that defendant is a nonresident, an allegation of the fact of such nonresidence must be made<sup>76</sup> in the affidavit<sup>77</sup> or either in the affidavit or in the bill, declaration, or petition,<sup>78</sup> where it is considered permissible, under the statutes, to show

Mere "non est inventus" return in the absence of such averment of nonresidence is insufficient to sustain an order of publication as it is no proof of nonresidence.—Stanton v. Thompson, supra.

Statement that defendant is not resident of named county in the state is insufficient.—Collins v. Stretz, 54 P.2d 264, 47 Ariz. 146, appeal dismissed 56 S.Ct. 835, 298 U.S. 640, 80 L.Ed. 1373.

Evidentiary facts

Under statute affidavit must show evidentiary facts on which the ultimate fact is asserted that defendant resides out of state and a naked allegation that defendant resides out of state, without a recitation of facts on which the ultimate fact is based, is insufficient.—Aronow v. Anderson, 104 P.2d 2, 110 Mont. 484.

this fact either in plaintiff's pleading or by a separate affidavit.<sup>79</sup> It is not necessary, however, that the language in the statute relating to nonresidence of defendant be used in the affidavit, but it will be sufficient if the statements made substantially show the statutory foundation for service by publication;<sup>80</sup> and it has been held that failure of an affidavit to state the fact of nonresidence directly and positively will not render the affidavit or the service founded thereon void if the nonresidence appears inferentially from the facts stated;<sup>81</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>82</sup>

Relation back. The allegation of nonresidence need not relate back to the commencement of the action;<sup>83</sup> it is sufficient to allege the nonresidence of the parties at the time of making the affidavit.<sup>84</sup>

Statements on information and belief. In some jurisdictions it has been held that a statement that defendant is a nonresident made on information and belief is not sufficient,<sup>85</sup> while in others a directly contrary view has been taken.<sup>86</sup> It has been considered necessary, where the fact of nonresidence is stated on information and belief, to state the source of affiant's information and the ground of his belief.<sup>87</sup> The affidavit may be sufficient where it does not rest solely on information and belief, as where, after stating information and belief, it states nonresidence as a fact.<sup>88</sup>

Publication sought on ground other than nonresidence. Under a statute authorizing service of summons by publication if it shall appear by affidavit that defendant could not, after due diligence, be found within the state, it is not necessary to show that defendant was nonresident.<sup>89</sup> Where publication is sought on the ground that the name of defendant is not known to plaintiff, some statutes do not require an allegation that defendant is a nonresident,<sup>90</sup> while others require a statement of plaintiff's belief that defendant's residence is not in the state.<sup>91</sup>

(6) Departure from State or Concealment to Avoid Service

Facts necessary to bring the case within the terms of the statute must be stated in the affidavit or other sworn statement where service by publication is sought on the ground that the defendant conceals himself so that process cannot be served on him or has departed from the state either generally or with intent to defraud creditors.

Under a statute, discussed supra § 56 b, authorizing service of process by publication on one who has departed from the state, it has been held that a statement in the affidavit that defendant has departed from the state is one of fact,<sup>92</sup> and is sufficient without giving the evidence on which it is founded;<sup>93</sup> but under a statute authorizing service of process by publication on a defendant who has left the state with intent to defraud creditors it has been held that a mere statement that defendant had left the state with intent to defraud creditors or to avoid the service of summons, in the language of the statute, without a statement of facts tending to prove these grounds, is insufficient, since they are conclusions for the judge to find,<sup>94</sup> and it is necessary that the affidavit state facts showing such intent.<sup>95</sup> An affidavit stating that defendant is absent from the state must state facts from which the conclusion may be reached that there is no intention of immediate return, as well as facts supporting the conclusion that defendant is absent from the state.<sup>96</sup> The affidavit, although slight and not conclusive, if

It is sufficient to state in a verified complaint that defendant is not a resident of the state and that his residence is unknown to plaintiff.—Collins v. Streitz, 54 P.2d 264, 47 Ariz. 146, appeal dismissed 56 S.Ct. 835, 298 U.S. 640, 80 L.Ed. 1373.

sufficient to call for judicial judgment, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court granting the application.<sup>97</sup> An affidavit stating that up to about the time the action was brought defendant was a resident of the state, that about that time he departed from the state with intent to defraud his creditors or to avoid the service of a summons on him, and that plaintiffs are unable to ascertain either the post-office address or residence of such defendant, sufficiently shows that he was a resident of the state when the affidavit was made.<sup>98</sup>

Concealment to avoid service. In order to authorize service of summons by publication on a resident on the ground that he conceals himself so that process cannot be served on him, this fact must be stated by sworn bill or affidavit.<sup>99</sup>

(7) Inability to Find, or Make Personal Service on, Defendant in State

- (a) In general
- (b) Showing diligence

(a) In General

The affidavit or other sworn statement must comply with a statutory requirement that it show that the defendant cannot be found, or be personally served with process, in the state.

A number of statutes providing for service by publication are held to require an affidavit or other sworn statement, filed to obtain an order for such service, to show that personal service on defendant cannot be made within the state,<sup>1</sup> and others are held to require a statement in the affidavit or other sworn statement that defendant cannot be found in the state.<sup>2</sup> Where the statute requires the affidavit to allege that personal service cannot be made on defendant in the state, the requirement is not satisfied by a mere allegation that defendant is a non-resident of the state.<sup>3</sup> It has also been held that it is insufficient merely to allege that defendant is a nonresident and that plaintiff is unable to make service of summons on defendant;<sup>4</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>5</sup>

Alleging on information and belief that defendant cannot be served with process within the state may be sufficient.<sup>6</sup>

In at least one jurisdiction an affidavit for publication against a nonresident individual need not, in addition to stating that he is a nonresident, state that the ordinary process of law cannot be served on him in the state,<sup>7</sup> and a statute requiring the additional statement has been held applicable only where a foreign corporation, and not where an individual, is defendant.<sup>8</sup>

(b) Showing Diligence

- aa. Necessity
- bb. Effect of return "not found"
- cc. Requisites and sufficiency of averments

aa. Necessity

Where required by statute, an allegation that the defendant cannot be found, or be served personally with process, in the state must contain the additional statement that this cannot be done after the exercise of due diligence.

The statutes under consideration are very generally held to require that the affidavit shall show the exercise of due diligence to make personal service of process on defendant within the state and that, in the exercise of such diligence, such personal service could not be made<sup>9</sup> or to impose a like requirement as to stating that defendant cannot, after due diligence, be found in the state.<sup>10</sup> The statutes of some jurisdictions have been construed as having no application to nonresident defendants, and as not requiring an allegation of the exercise of due diligence, where it is alleged that defendant is a non-resident of the state;<sup>11</sup> but in other jurisdictions, where the question has been directly raised, it has been held that an averment that defendant is a non-resident of the state will not dispense with the necessity of showing that he cannot, by the exercise of due diligence, be found or personally served with process within the state.<sup>12</sup>

The requisite diligence may not be shown by an officer's return of "not found" unless the return is incorporated in the affidavit.

Where the statutes require all the facts necessary to confer the right to an order for service of process by publication to be shown by affidavit or other sworn statement, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the general rule is that a return of "not found" by an officer cannot be substituted for, and take the place of, an affidavit showing due diligence;<sup>13</sup> and, while there is authority apparently to the contrary,<sup>14</sup> it has also been generally held that the exercise of due diligence cannot be shown partly by affidavit and partly by a return;<sup>15</sup> but it is permissible to incorporate the return in the affidavit for the purpose of showing the exercise of due diligence,<sup>16</sup> and the return may be sufficient for that purpose.<sup>17</sup>

cc. Requisites and Sufficiency of Averments

Probative facts showing what diligence has been exercised must be alleged in the affidavit.

According to the weight of authority, it will not be sufficient to allege in general terms the exercise of due diligence; it is necessary to allege the probative facts showing what diligence has been exercised<sup>18</sup> so that the court can judicially determine whether reasonable diligence has been exercised.<sup>19</sup> In a limited number of jurisdictions, however, it is not necessary to allege the probative facts showing what diligence was exercised to obtain personal service.<sup>20</sup>

If the facts stated by the affidavit are not inconsistent with the presence or residence of defendant in the state at the date of the affidavit, it is insufficient.<sup>21</sup>

Stating on information and belief that defendant cannot, after the exercise of due diligence, be found within the state may constitute a sufficient basis for an order of publication;<sup>22</sup> but an affidavit by plaintiff stating no fact known to him, and containing purely hearsay statements, with respect to diligence, has been held insufficient.<sup>23</sup> An additional statement, although a mere expression of belief, has been held not to weaken, or detract from, a positive statement in the affidavit.<sup>24</sup>

those which allege merely the nonresidence of defendant;<sup>26</sup> that defendant is a nonresident and cannot be found within the state;<sup>27</sup> that defendant is a nonresident, living in an adjoining state, and that plaintiff will be unable, with due diligence, to make personal service on him within the state;<sup>28</sup> that defendants "cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state" and that defendants are not residents of the state;<sup>29</sup> that the officer had returned the summons not served and that due diligence had been used to find defendant;<sup>30</sup> that plaintiff had made every effort to serve process and had been unable to do so because defendant rarely came within the jurisdiction;<sup>31</sup> or that affiant believes "that the defendant is not a resident of the state or cannot be found therein."<sup>32</sup> Affidavits which have been held sufficient in this respect<sup>33</sup> include those which allege that defendants are not residents of the state but reside and, at the time of making the application, are at a designated place in another state.<sup>34</sup>

In some decisions the affidavit has been held sufficient if it presents facts showing clearly and conclusively that defendant is a nonresident living at the time in a distant state or country on the ground that this is sufficient to show that he could not, in the exercise of due diligence, be found or served with process within the state;<sup>35</sup> and a further allegation in the affidavit that defendant cannot with due diligence be served personally within the state will be regarded not solely as a conclusion of law, but as a statement of fact tending to show that due diligence has been used.<sup>36</sup>

Absent or concealed defendants. The rule requiring a statement of the probative facts showing what diligence has been used is not satisfied by a general averment that defendant cannot be found within the state because of his absence therefrom, or concealment within it.<sup>37</sup> The affidavit should state the facts of inquiry and investigation, so that the court can see that the conclusion that the party cannot be found for the reason stated is a reasonable one on such facts;<sup>38</sup> and it has further been held that the proof of defendant's absence and of diligence in seeking to obtain service on him must be based on applicant's own knowledge, and not on information and belief.<sup>39</sup>

(8) Property of Defendant in State

A statutory requirement that the affidavit for service of process by publication in an action against a nonresident state that the defendant has property in the state is mandatory and must be complied with by making an allegation which is direct and specifies the property.

In the absence of statutory requirement, an affidavit for service of process by publication in an action against a nonresident need not state that he has property within the state;<sup>40</sup> but a statute imposing such a requirement is mandatory and must be complied with.<sup>41</sup> Where such an allegation is required, it should be direct and specify the property;<sup>42</sup> and it is not sufficient to state the fact on information and belief,<sup>43</sup> or to make the bare assertion that defendant has property in the state,<sup>44</sup> or to refer to the description in the complaint.<sup>45</sup>

(9) Other Facts

An affidavit filed for the purpose of obtaining service of process by publication may and must comply with statutory requirements as to stating that the defendant's property in the state has been attached, that no certificate of residence has been filed, that process has been returned unexecuted, that a copy of the summons and complaint has been mailed to the defendant at his place of residence, or that the defendant is a transient person or is out of the state.

45. Minn.—Wiik v. Russell, 218 N.W. 110, 173 Minn. 580.

An averment in an affidavit that the persons to be served reside outside the state is sufficient to assert the statutory ground that defendant is "out of the state."<sup>46</sup>

Failure to file certificate of residence. Under a statute providing that, where service by publication is sought on the ground that defendant cannot, after due and diligent search, be found within the state, the affidavit must further state that no certificate of residence has been filed on behalf of defendant, or, if such certificate has been filed, the sheriff could not find him in the place therein designated, the fact that the affidavit alleges that defendant resided out of the state does not obviate the necessity for making this statement.<sup>47</sup> If, however, the affidavit is based on the ground that defendant resided out of the state, the affidavit need not state that no certificate of residence had been filed.<sup>48</sup>

Levy of attachment. Where the levy of a warrant of attachment on property of a nonresident defendant within the state is made a condition precedent to the allowance of an order of publication, as discussed supra § 59, the affidavit must show that such warrant has been levied on defendant's property,<sup>49</sup> and it must state pertinent facts as to the manner in which the levy was made so as to prove that a proper levy was made.<sup>50</sup>

Mailing copy of summons or complaint to defendant's residence. Under statutes requiring the affidavit for service of process by publication to state that plaintiff has mailed a copy of the summons, or a copy of the summons and complaint, to defendant at his place of residence, or to state that such place of residence is not known, the affidavit need not allege the mailing of a copy of the summons and complaint where it alleges that defendant's place of residence is unknown to affiant.<sup>51</sup> The requirement of the statute is not satisfied by an averment that affiant has mailed a copy of the summons "to the last known residence address" of defendant.<sup>52</sup>

Return of process unexecuted. Under statutes which authorize service of process by publication where process directed to the officer of the county in which defendant resides, or is, has been twice delivered to such officer more than ten days before the return day, and has been returned without being executed, an affidavit which reasonably imports these facts is sufficient;<sup>53</sup> but an affidavit that the persons reside in, or are in, the county, and which omits the words "more than" before "ten days," is insufficient.<sup>54</sup>

Transient defendants. In order to authorize a judgment against defendant on constructive service as a transient person, he must be shown to be a transient.<sup>55</sup>

a. In General

An order of publication is essential to service of process by publication where it is required by statute.

An order of publication is essential to service of process by publication where it is required by statute,<sup>56</sup> but not otherwise.<sup>57</sup> Under some statutes an order is necessary in some, but not other, cases in which service by publication is had.<sup>58</sup> It has been said that such an order takes the place of process and that its purpose is to bring a party into court, apprise him of the nature of the proceeding against him, and to notify him that his rights will be affected thereby.<sup>59</sup>

By whom made. Under some statutes, an order of publication is to be made by the clerk of court,<sup>60</sup> under others it is to be made by the court or judge,<sup>61</sup> and under still others it is to be made by the court in some,<sup>62</sup> and by the clerk in other,<sup>63</sup> cases or situations. So too, under some statutes, a clerk of court acts ministerially and not judicially in making or issuing an order of publication;<sup>64</sup> but under other statutes he acts judicially<sup>65</sup> or his duty in granting the order is somewhat of a judicial character.<sup>66</sup>

b. Basis

An order for publication must be authorized by the facts stated in the required affidavit or other sworn statement; and under some statutes the order may not be made unless the court, judge, or clerk issuing it is satisfied that the conditions for service by publication exist.

The order must be authorized by the facts stated in the required affidavit or other sworn statement;<sup>67</sup> and an order based on a ground other than the one stated in the affidavit or pleading used as a substitute therefor is void.<sup>68</sup>

Where the affidavit or complaint states the facts

made essential by statute as a prerequisite to this mode of service, the right to an order of publication is, by some statutes, made absolute, and it is immaterial whether or not such statements are true.<sup>69</sup> Under other statutes, however, it is the truth, rather than the making, of the affidavit which enables the court to acquire jurisdiction by publication,<sup>70</sup> and an order for service of process by publication may properly be made when, but only when, the court, judge, or clerk, as the case may be, is satisfied that the condition for service by publication exist.<sup>71</sup> Still another view is that, before the statements of fact in the affidavit are challenged in some recognized legal proceeding, it is immaterial whether or not they are true,<sup>72</sup> but that when, at a permissible time, an interested party files an objection impugning the allegations as untrue, it then becomes necessary for the court or judge to set the matter for hearing and determine whether or not the challenged allegations are true.<sup>73</sup> At any rate, if the facts stated in the affidavit are sufficient to Issuance of order as judicial or ministerial act of clerk see supra subdivision a of this section.

In Missouri

(1) No judicial investigation or determination is necessary before making an order for publication under Mo.Rev.St. § 891; the order is based not on the ascertainment of the fact that defendant is nonresident or inaccessible, but on the fact that it is so stated in the petition or in the affidavit.—Cummings v. Brown, 81 S.W. 158, 181 Mo. 711—50 C.J. p 528 note 35 [c] (4).

(2) On the other hand, an order for publication may be made under Mo.Rev.St. § 893, relating to a case where summons has been issued and a return that defendant cannot be found has been made, only when there has been a judicial investigation and the court has become satisfied that process cannot be served.—Williams v. Luecke, App., 152 S.W. 2d 991—50 C.J. p 528 note 35 [c] (6).

(3) Under the latter statute, it is possible for the court to become satisfied, from nothing more than the return, that process cannot be served.—Williams v. Luecke, supra—50 C.J. p 518 note 12 [a].

(4) However, the court is not restricted to return in ascertaining whether defendants can be found within jurisdiction so that another summons can be served on them.—Williams v. Luecke, supra.

(5) A finding by court that defendant cannot be served in county where court is situated is not sufficient to authorize an order of publication based on a non est return.—Diekroger v. McCormick, 163 S.W.2d 927, 349 Mo. 1098.

give the court jurisdiction to make the order, it is not subject to collateral attack.<sup>74</sup>

Facts existing at time order made. An order for service of process by publication must be based on facts existing at the time it was made;<sup>75</sup> but it is not necessary that the making of the affidavit and the order should follow in instantaneous succession;<sup>76</sup> and it is necessary and sufficient that the order be based on an affidavit made and presented within a reasonable time before the making of the order,<sup>77</sup> that is, within such a time that no presumption can fairly arise that the state of facts presented by the affidavit has changed in the meantime.<sup>78</sup>

Although an affidavit for publication was not filed within a reasonable time before the granting of the order, the order will be upheld where a supplemental affidavit, showing the existence of the jurisdictional facts, was filed one day before the order was granted.<sup>79</sup>

(1) In General

An order for publication must be in writing and comply with statutory requirements as to contents. When otherwise valid, it is not vitiated by surplusage.

The requirements of the statute as to the contents of an order for publication must be complied with and a substantial failure to do so renders the order fatally defective;<sup>80</sup> but a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute has been held sufficient.<sup>81</sup> The order need not follow the exact language of the statute if the meaning of it is the same,<sup>82</sup> and obviously it is not necessary to comply with a statute which is inapplicable.<sup>83</sup> It has been held that the order must be strictly construed.<sup>84</sup>

The order must be in writing;<sup>85</sup> but, in the absence of a statute requiring it, neither a seal<sup>86</sup> nor a date<sup>87</sup> is essential to the validity of the order. Signature of the clerk of court is not essential in the absence of a statute requiring it;<sup>88</sup> but, when such signature is required by statute, failure of the clerk to sign the order of publication has been held to render the order fatally defective.<sup>89</sup>

It has been held that failure of the judge, to whom the order is tendered for signature, to sign it is fatal;<sup>90</sup> but it has also been held that the judge's signature is not essential to the validity of an order of court which derives its validity from the fact, evidenced by record, that it is made by the court during the transaction of its official business.<sup>91</sup>

Surplusage. An otherwise valid order is not vitiated by surplusage.<sup>92</sup>

Second order. Where, after obtaining an order for publication, plaintiff, believing the affidavits to be insufficient, procures another order, the validity of the second order is not destroyed by the existence of the first.<sup>93</sup>

(2) Jurisdictional Facts

It has been held that an order for publication need not recite a finding of the jurisdictional facts required to appear in the affidavit.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that the order must state the facts showing that publication is authorized,<sup>94</sup> but in other jurisdictions it has been held that the order need not recite a finding of the jurisdictional facts which are required to appear in the affidavit,<sup>95</sup> and if it does so such recital may be treated as surplusage.<sup>96</sup> The order, it has been said, is only the conclusion of the court based on the affidavit and need not contain any recitals of facts whatever.<sup>97</sup> It will be presumed from the fact of making the order that the jurisdictional facts necessary to its making were duly established by the affidavit<sup>98</sup> or by the affidavit and complaint.<sup>99</sup>

(3) Nature, Object, and Identification of Action

It is necessary to comply with a statutory requirement that the order state briefly and generally the object and nature of the action.

Noncompliance with a statutory requirement that the order of publication state briefly in general terms the object and nature of the action renders the order fatally defective.<sup>1</sup> The words "this cause" appearing in an order are deemed to refer to the cause designated in the caption and to give defendant sufficient notice of the particular suit in which he is to appear.<sup>2</sup>

(4) Names and Interests of Parties

The names of all defendants, if known, must be correctly stated in the order for publication; and if their names are unknown the order must so state and comply with statutory requirements as to describing the property involved and stating the interest of the defendants therein.

The names both of plaintiffs<sup>3</sup> and of defendants, if known,<sup>4</sup> should be correctly stated in the order.

Publication is ineffective as against one of several defendants not named in the order,<sup>5</sup> even though publication was actually made against all of them;<sup>6</sup> and it has been held that an order is void where it names only the defendant on whom service is made by publication and omits a resident defendant.<sup>7</sup>

If it is sought to serve by publication unknown persons as parties defendant, the order must state the fact that they are unknown<sup>8</sup> and comply with a statutory requirement that it definitely and briefly describe the property involved.<sup>9</sup> An order for publication against unknown defendants which advises defendants of the identical facts as to their interest alleged in the petition is sufficient on collateral attack although it does not do so in the identical words of the petition.<sup>10</sup>

(5) Day for Appearance

An order of publication is void where, in fixing the date for the defendant's appearance, it does not conform to statutory provisions on the subject.

An order fixing the date of appearance otherwise than in accordance with the statutory provisions on the subject is void;<sup>11</sup> but in the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect it is not necessary that the order should fix a specific day for defendant's appearance.<sup>12</sup>

thorizing publication.<sup>13</sup> It should designate the newspaper in which publication is to be made;<sup>14</sup> but a failure to do so has been considered an unsubstantial omission which is not fatal.<sup>15</sup> Although the statutes frequently require in express terms that the order shall direct publication in a paper most likely to give notice to defendant, this fact need not be recited in the order where the statutes do not specifically require such recital.<sup>16</sup>

Duration of publication. Statutory requirements as to directions as to the length of time during which publication shall be made must be complied with;<sup>17</sup> but there is authority to the effect that, if publication is made for the proper length of time, it will not be vitiated by the fact that the directions of the order were for publication for a shorter period of time than required by statute.<sup>18</sup>

(b) Of Mailing of Copies of Summons, Complaint, and Order

It is necessary that an order of publication comply with a statutory requirement as to directing the mailing of copies of certain papers to the person to be served.

There must be a compliance with a statutory requirement that the order of publication shall direct copies of the summons, or of the complaint and summons, or of the complaint, order, and summons, to be deposited in the post office directed to defendant to be served at his place of residence, if it is known or can be ascertained;<sup>19</sup> but a substantial compliance with such a statute has been held sufficient.<sup>20</sup>

Where defendant's place of residence is given by the affidavit, the order must direct the copies to be sent to the place so designated,<sup>21</sup> and where the order directs the mailing to be made to a place different from that so designated the court acquires no jurisdiction<sup>22</sup> even though personal service on defendant at the place designated by the affidavit is made under an alternative clause in the order.<sup>23</sup>

Time of mailing. There must be a compliance with statutory requirements as to directions contained in the order as to the time of mailing copies or the order will be void.<sup>24</sup> Although the statute provides that the order shall direct that copies shall be mailed "forthwith," it has been held that the omission of the word "forthwith" in the order is at most an irregularity, which does not render the proceedings void on collateral attack, if it appears that, in fact, the copies were mailed within a reasonable time.<sup>25</sup>

Designating post office. If the statute provides that the order shall direct the deposit of copies in a designated post office, this requirement must be complied with or the order will be insufficient.<sup>26</sup>

Where residence is unknown. If it appears by the affidavit that defendant's residence is unknown and cannot be ascertained, the order need not contain a provision requiring the depositing of a copy of the summons<sup>27</sup> or notice<sup>28</sup> in the post office. Nevertheless, if the order omits such direction, it must appear from the affidavit that after reasonable diligence plaintiff had been unable to ascertain such place of residence.<sup>29</sup>

(c) Of Alternative Method of Service

Under a statute providing that the order shall direct service by publication or, at the option of the plaintiff, service of process without the state, the order need not direct both methods of service where the plaintiff elects to have service made in one of the alternative methods.

order need not direct both methods of service where plaintiff elects to have service made in one of the alternative methods.<sup>30</sup> An order directing either method alone followed by due service in that manner will be equally good with one which directs both with an option to choose either.<sup>31</sup> It has been held that, if plaintiff makes no election between the two modes of service, and the order is in the alternative, and service is duly made by one of the two methods, defects in the other method attempted to be authorized will not invalidate the order;<sup>32</sup> but there is also authority directly to the contrary.<sup>33</sup> Where the statute provides that, if the post office of defendant is known, the order must direct the mailing of copies to be deposited in a specified post office addressed to defendant at his post-office address, and that if his address cannot be ascertained the order must direct that the deposit may be omitted because defendant's post-office address cannot be ascertained, the order must contain one of two directions, and an order directing deposit of copies to the last known address of defendant, if it can be ascertained, and, if not, the mailing of copies to be omitted, is fatally defective.<sup>34</sup>

§ 66. — Filing and Entry

When required by statute, filing or entry of an order of publication is necessary to confer jurisdiction.

Where a statute requires an order for publication and the papers upon which it is made to be filed with the clerk on or before the day of the first publication, the filing of the order and papers is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction by the court.<sup>35</sup> Nevertheless, where the order and accompanying papers are delivered to the clerk and he retains them in his possession instead of filing them, the failure does not amount to a jurisdictional defect.<sup>36</sup> Where the statute does not prescribe that the order shall be filed at the time the complaint is filed, failure to file the order until after the filing of the summons and complaint does not invalidate publication of the summons.<sup>37</sup>

Entry. In the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect, it has been held that no entry of the order of publication is necessary.<sup>38</sup> Where the statute requires entry of the order, it has been held that the court acquires no jurisdiction, and the proceedings are void, unless the statute is complied with; but in some jurisdictions, where the entry of order is provided for by rule of court,<sup>40</sup> or where a statute was mentioned by the court in passing on the question,<sup>41</sup> it has been held that failure to enter the order is, at most, an irregularity,<sup>42</sup> not available in collateral proceedings.<sup>43</sup>

§ 67. Publication of Notice

Publication of the notice prescribed by statute is essential to service of process by publication.

The publication of the notice prescribed by statute authorizing service of process by publication is indispensable.<sup>44</sup>

§ 68. — Mode of Publication

The mode of publication prescribed by statute must be strictly followed.

- d. Description of property
- e. Time for appearance

a. In General

The published notice must comply with statutory requirements as to form and contents; but substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.

The form of notice for service by publication and what it shall contain rest in legislative discretion, subject to the restriction that the notice shall be of such character that it will have a tendency, in a reasonable degree, to convey information to interested persons that the action affects their rights.<sup>47</sup> Statutes authorizing service of process by publication vary considerably as to the form which the published notice shall take, but the form prescribed should be followed, whether it be a copy of the summons in the action,<sup>48</sup> a copy of the order for publication,<sup>49</sup> a copy of the warning order,<sup>50</sup> or other specified form.<sup>51</sup> A copy of the complaint need not be published where the statute requires publication only of a copy of the summons.<sup>52</sup>

The notice must purport to be an official act;<sup>53</sup> but, where a statute providing for notice prescribes no form, the notice need not bear the style "the state of" or the seal of the court, nor need it be signed by the clerk.<sup>54</sup>

The contents of the notice should fairly communicate to defendant the fact of the commencement of the suit and its general nature, so that he may ascertain whether his interests are affected.<sup>55</sup> There must be a compliance with statutory requirements as to what the notice, or paper published as notice, shall contain in order to give the court jurisdiction.<sup>56</sup> Where the statute prescribes certain things which the published notice shall contain, they all must be considered essential, and the absence of any of them in the published notice is fatal to the jurisdiction;<sup>57</sup> but the notice need contain nothing which is not required by statute.<sup>58</sup> In determining the sufficiency of the notice published, the substantial, rather than the technical and literal, requirements of the statute are to be observed;<sup>59</sup> hence substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute as to what the notice shall contain will be sufficient,<sup>60</sup> and a notice otherwise sufficient will not be rendered insufficient by informalities in the manner and order of stating the necessary facts,<sup>61</sup> or by formal defects or omissions<sup>62</sup> which are not calculated to mislead,<sup>63</sup> or by surplusage.<sup>64</sup> Nevertheless, the contents of a published notice are measured with greater strictness than where notice is personally served.<sup>65</sup>

Residence or post-office address of defendant. The description of defendant's residence by the name of the city and state, without the addition of the street address, may be sufficient;<sup>66</sup> and the misspelling of the post office will not avoid the process if the name as spelled is similar in sound and not misleading.<sup>67</sup>

b. Nature and Object of Action or Petition

It is necessary to comply with a statutory requirement that the published notice contain a brief or summary statement of the object and nature of the action or petition.

The published notice, in order to be sufficient, must comply with statutory requirements that the notice shall make a brief or summary statement of the object and nature of the action or petition.<sup>68</sup>

or of the object and prayer of the petition,<sup>69</sup> or of the substance of the petition.<sup>70</sup> If more than one object is sought, the notice must contain a statement of all of the objects, otherwise it is fatally defective;<sup>71</sup> and, where the object of the action is different from that stated in the notice, the notice, if not void, is at least irregular and misleading.<sup>72</sup>

The particularity required in a petition or complaint is not necessary in the notice;<sup>73</sup> and although the notice does not state the cause of action as fully as the law requires, it may, nevertheless, be sufficient when collaterally questioned.<sup>74</sup> It has been held that, when not required by statute or rule of court to do so, the published notice need not advise defendant of the nature of the suit or of the character of the relief sought therein.<sup>75</sup>

c. Names of Parties

The name, if known, of a defendant on whom it is sought to serve process by publication should be correctly stated in the published notice, but it is sufficient to state the name by which the defendant is commonly known; and a slight error in spelling does not render the notice fatally defective where the notice otherwise so describes the defendant that the error is not misleading.

Under some statutes the names of the parties plaintiff should be stated in the notice published.<sup>76</sup> The names of parties defendant on whom service of this character is sought must, if known, be correctly stated in the notice published; if not the notice is void.<sup>77</sup> However, it will be sufficient that the name given in the notice be that by which defendant is commonly known;<sup>78</sup> and where non-resident defendants have left the state many years before commencement of the action, and it could not be discovered by the exercise of due diligence whether they were dead or alive, or their place of residence, it will be sufficient that the published summons designate them by the names by which they were last known when they left the state.<sup>79</sup>

Estoppel generally. Parties may be estopped to contend that they were not properly named, as when the grantee in a deed allows his name to be erroneously written therein and the deed so made to be recorded.<sup>80</sup>

Defendants not sought to be served by publication. The notice published need not set out the names of any defendants except those summoned by publication.<sup>81</sup>

Defendants included in class. There is authority for the view that, in an action in the nature of a proceeding in rem, service by publication of a copy of the summons is sufficient although defendants included in a well-defined class are not named in the summons.<sup>82</sup>

Married woman. Designation of a married woman by her maiden name in the notice published usually renders it fatally defective as to her.<sup>83</sup> It is otherwise, however, where she had left the state many years before suit was brought and had not been heard from during that time and where with due diligence it could not be discovered whether she was alive or dead,<sup>84</sup> or where defendant, a nonresident married woman, was last known by the name designated in the notice, and where the instrument through which she claims is of record in that name.<sup>85</sup>

Ordinarily designation of a married woman by the name of her first husband in the notice published renders it fatally defective as to her,<sup>86</sup> especially where the circumstances indicate a purpose to divest her of her interest in the property without compensation on the theory that she had not been heard from for years;<sup>87</sup> but it has been held that designation of a nonresident female defendant who had been a nonresident of the state for many years and had not been heard from during that time, by the only name by which she was known in the state, is sufficient, although her first husband was dead and she had since married again.<sup>88</sup>

Initials. It is generally held that it is not sufficient to designate one to whom process or notice is directed by the initials of his given name, where service is by publication and he does not appear,<sup>89</sup> except where an estoppel exists,<sup>90</sup> as where the title to the land in controversy was taken by defendant in the initials of his given name,<sup>91</sup> or the instrument sued on was signed by him by such initials,<sup>92</sup> or where such initials have been commonly used by the individual in the transaction of his business affairs, and he is commonly designated thereby.<sup>93</sup>

Defendants whose names are unknown. Where the names of heirs of a deceased person who are necessary parties are unknown, it will generally be sufficient for the published notice to designate them as the heirs of such person.<sup>94</sup> However, a notice addressed generally to the nonresident heirs of a designated person, without naming such as are known, is insufficient;<sup>95</sup> and where the statute requires the notice to describe an unknown party as near as may be by the character in which he is sued, and by reference to his title or interest in the subject matter of litigation, it will not be sufficient to describe defendants as unknown heirs of a designated person, especially where they are not sued as heirs of such persons, but as devisees under his will.<sup>96</sup>

tion tends to strictness even in names,<sup>97</sup> ideal accuracy is not required.<sup>98</sup> A slight error in the spelling of the name of defendant,<sup>99</sup> or the transposition of the initial letters of his name,<sup>1</sup> or the omission of defendant's Christian name<sup>2</sup> does not render the notice fatally defective where defendant is otherwise so described in the notice that the error could mislead nobody. A slight variance in the spelling and pronunciation of the name of defendant in a published summons, caused by the change of a single letter in the Christian name which is not so material as to be misleading, will not be fatal to the jurisdiction of the court;<sup>3</sup> and the same is true of the addition of a single letter in the surname, where the name, as published, appears and sounds similar to the real name.<sup>4</sup>

Although a deceased person is erroneously named as defendant in a notice published in a proceeding in rem or quasi in rem, nevertheless where such person and his unknown heirs are named, the notice will be treated as though the name of the deceased person had been omitted.<sup>5</sup>

d. Description of Property

When required by statute, a description of the property involved in the action should be contained in the published notice.

If so required by statute,<sup>6</sup> the notice should contain a description of the property in respect of which the action is brought.<sup>7</sup> The statutory requirement is satisfied if, from the notice published, any person of common understanding would be able to locate and identify the property;<sup>8</sup> a description by lot or block number of land is not necessary;<sup>9</sup> and it has been held that, notwithstanding the requirements of the statute, if the notice shows even inferentially or imperfectly that real estate will be affected, it will be upheld as against a collateral attack.<sup>10</sup> Where the notice does not fulfill the statutory requirements, a further publication may be ordered.<sup>11</sup>

There should be a compliance, in the published notice, with a statutory requirement that it state the time fixed by law for defendant's appearance.

There should be a compliance with statutory requirements that the published notice must state the time fixed by law for defendant's appearance,<sup>12</sup> and neither the courts nor the clerks of the courts are vested with any discretion with respect to the date on which defendant shall be notified to make appearance.<sup>13</sup> There is some conflict of authority as to the effect of a notice which fails to give defendant the statutory time for appearance and answer; according to some decisions the court acquires no jurisdiction over defendant by virtue of such notice, and a judgment rendered in the cause is void, rather than merely voidable,<sup>14</sup> but according to other decisions the defect is fatal only on direct, and not on collateral, attack.<sup>15</sup>

A discrepancy between bill and notice as to the time in which complainant asks that defendant may answer the bill is of no importance if the day named for answering in the notice is the proper one.<sup>16</sup>

§ 70. — Time of Publication

A statute designating the period for which publication shall be made and prescribing how often it shall be made must be strictly observed; but a statutory requirement of publication for a designated number of weeks is satisfied by publication once a week for that number of successive weeks, and it is not necessary that the full number of weeks so designated intervene between the first and last publications.

A statute designating the period for which publication shall be made and prescribing how often it shall be made must be strictly observed;<sup>17</sup> but publication for the number of times, and for the length of time, prescribed by the statute is sufficient.<sup>18</sup> Neither the courts<sup>19</sup> nor the clerks of the courts<sup>20</sup> are vested with any discretion as to the length of time the notice shall be published, where it is prescribed by statute. Failure to publish for the required length of time is not a mere irregularity, but a jurisdictional defect, which renders all subsequent proceedings under such notice void;<sup>21</sup> but, on the other hand, publication for a longer period than that required by the statute<sup>22</sup> or order for publication<sup>23</sup> will not impair the efficacy of the notice, although such publication will not operate to extend the time to answer beyond the period fixed by the statute and order of publication.<sup>24</sup> Failure to complete the service by publication before the return day renders it void;<sup>25</sup> publications after the return day do not serve to give notice.<sup>26</sup>

Commencement of publication. When the statute does not prescribe the time for commencing publication, it may be commenced within a reasonable time after a return of the sheriff "not found."<sup>27</sup> If the time within which publication should be commenced is prescribed by statute, the provisions of the statutes are regarded as mandatory, and a valid service by publication cannot be had unless the first publication is commenced within the time so prescribed.<sup>28</sup> The first publication is deemed to take place within the prescribed time when the newspaper containing the notice is actually published, that is, actually issued and placed on public sale, within that time, even though the front page of the newspaper states a later date of publication.<sup>29</sup>

Publication on holiday. The fact that one of the days on which notice was published was a secular holiday does not affect the validity of the service.<sup>30</sup>

Number of weeks. Where publication for a designated number of weeks is required by order of court or statute, service by publication is obviously insufficient if the number of publications made is less than the number of weeks so designated;<sup>31</sup> but, while there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>32</sup> it has generally been held that a statutory requirement that publication be made for a designated number of weeks is satisfied by publication once a week for that number of successive weeks,<sup>33</sup> and that it is not necessary, in order to render the publication sufficient, that the full number of weeks thus designated shall intervene between the first and last publication<sup>34</sup> or that there should be a greater number of publications than the number of weeks during which the statute requires publication to be made.<sup>35</sup> Where the statute requires a designated number of publications to be made in successive weeks, it is not permissible to make two publications in one week and none in another;<sup>36</sup> publication must be made once in each week,<sup>37</sup> but, according to some authorities, it is not necessary that each publication should be made on the same day of the week under a statute of this character<sup>38</sup> or under a statute requiring publication "once a week" for a stated number of months.<sup>39</sup> It has been held, however, that the publications should be spaced substantially at intervals of seven days.<sup>40</sup>

Where the paper in which publication is made has more than one issue each week, publication in all the regular issues of the paper, whether daily, semi-weekly, or weekly has been held to be necessary to the complete publication of the notice for that particular week.<sup>41</sup> Under an order requiring publication at least twice a week for a period of not less than four weeks, two publications in each such successive seven days commencing on the day of the entry of the order is sufficient although there is but one publication in the last calendar week of the period.<sup>42</sup>

Number of months. Where a publication for a certain number of months is required, this must be taken, in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, to mean calendar months, and a publication for that number of lunar months is not sufficient.<sup>43</sup> Where the statute requires publication once a week for a designated number of calendar months, it is not necessary that the number of full calendar months shall intervene between the first and the last publication.<sup>44</sup> Under some statutes publication of summons against a defendant residing out of, or absent from, the state ordinarily must be for not less than a prescribed number of months, but an exception exists in the case of certain summary proceedings.<sup>45</sup>

mation of the general reading public. Statutory restrictions, such as a restriction of the newspapers in which publication may be made to those which are printed or published in the county, are accorded effect.

Some statutes empower courts, designated officers,<sup>46</sup> or plaintiff or his attorney<sup>47</sup> to select the paper in which publication is to be made. Where a notice is published in the paper intended by the order it is sufficient, although there has been a slight error in the designation of the paper in the order;<sup>48</sup> and publication in a paper other than the one designated, although irregular,<sup>49</sup> may not, in some circumstances, be wholly ineffective;<sup>50</sup> but, if the statute forbids publication in a designated kind of newspaper, a notice published in such paper is ineffective for any purpose.<sup>51</sup>

Publication in a supplement consisting of an additional sheet or sheets folded in with the newspaper and sent out with it to all subscribers, except that those receiving complimentary copies might not receive the supplement, is a sufficient publication of the notice.<sup>52</sup>

Length of existence of paper. A statute requiring state and county printing to be executed within the state, and providing that, when done by a weekly newspaper, it must have been published fifty-two consecutive weeks prior thereto, does not apply to the publication of a summons by order of the court, so as to make it necessary, if published in a weekly newspaper, that the newspaper shall have been theretofore published for fifty-two consecutive weeks.<sup>53</sup>

tion to determine in what paper the publication will be most likely to give notice, it has been held that the court may, in its discretion, direct publication in a German, instead of an English, newspaper, as being most likely to give the person intended to be served notice, although defendant is an American, where the notice itself is printed in English as required by the statute.<sup>55</sup>

Character of matter published. The word "newspapers," as used in constructive service statutes, has reference to some publication appearing at daily or weekly intervals reporting the news or happenings of local or foreign interest or both, such as social, religious, political, moral, business, professional, editorial, and other kindred information, intended for the general reading public;<sup>56</sup> and, while publications in newspapers meeting these requirements will be sufficient,<sup>57</sup> publication in any newspaper falling short of these requirements is not sufficient.<sup>58</sup> A newspaper designed for the benefit of any one class of the whole population and that class a negligible per cent of the entire public, such as legal and medical journals or literary and scientific publications, does not satisfy the statutory requirement<sup>59</sup> unless in addition thereto it reports daily or weekly the news of a local or foreign interest and in other respects meets the requirement of a newspaper as heretofore defined.<sup>60</sup>

Place of printing or publication. If the statute requires the paper to be "published" in the county it is immaterial where it is "printed."<sup>61</sup> If the statute requires the paper to be "printed" in the county, publication of notice in a paper published in the county, but printed elsewhere, is insufficient;<sup>62</sup> but this requirement is satisfied by publication of the notice in that part of the paper printed in the county, although a part of it is printed outside the county.<sup>63</sup> A statute requiring publication to be made in some newspaper "printed" in the county where the petition is filed applies to petitions in error filed in the supreme court.<sup>64</sup> If no newspaper is printed or published in the county, publication may, under some statutes, be made in a newspaper published in an adjoining county.<sup>65</sup> Under a statute requiring publication of notice to be made in a newspaper published in the county, if a county is by statute divided into two judicial districts and the two courts given exclusive jurisdiction of suits arising within their own territory, each court must confine itself to its own territory in making publication of orders, and cannot order publication in a newspaper published in a town lying outside its own territorial limits if there is a newspaper published within such limits.<sup>66</sup>

By express provision of some statutes, in actions involving title to land, notice by publication to unknown heirs must be published in a paper in the county where the land is situated.<sup>67</sup>

§ 72. — Time When Service Is Complete

Statutes expressly providing when service by publication is complete are accorded effect; and, under the construction placed on some statutes not making such express provision, service is not complete until the full time prescribed for publication, computed from the first publication, has elapsed; but another construction, sometimes adopted, is that service is complete on the date of the last publication.

Completion of publication is essential to acquisition of jurisdiction of defendant by publication of summons.<sup>68</sup> In some jurisdictions it has been held that service is complete on the date of the last publication, although the full number of days necessary to constitute the specified number of weeks or months have not elapsed since the date of the first publication.<sup>69</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that, where a notice is required to be published once a week for a certain number of weeks or months, the full number of days necessary to constitute the required number of weeks or months must elapse before the publication can be deemed complete,<sup>70</sup> and when it has elapsed the service is complete.<sup>71</sup> Under the express provisions of some statutes, the service is deemed complete seven days after the last publication,<sup>72</sup> and under other statutes it is complete a specified number of days after the first publication<sup>73</sup> where the requisite number of publications have been made;<sup>74</sup> but a statute prescribing the minimum time to be fixed for appearance does not require notice for such minimum period from and after the date of the last publication.<sup>75</sup>

E. SERVICE IN AID OR IN LIEU OF PUBLICATION

§ 73. Personal Service Out of Jurisdiction

- a. In general
- b. Requisites

a. In General

Under statutes so providing there may be a personal service on a nonresident outside the state as a substitute for, and the equivalent of, constructive service and service by publication; but only jurisdiction in rem is acquired thereby.

Under statutes so providing, generally in connection with provisions for service by publication, there may, under certain conditions, be a personal service on a nonresident defendant beyond the jurisdiction of the state.<sup>76</sup> Under such circumstances, according

- Enforcement of "lawful right"
- Under statute so providing, personal service outside state on nonresident is authorized where suit is to the decisions, the service is the equivalent of,<sup>77</sup> and incident of,<sup>78</sup> and a substitute for,<sup>79</sup> constructive service, or, it has been held, substituted service,<sup>80</sup> and in lieu of,<sup>81</sup> equivalent to,<sup>82</sup> and effective to the same extent as,<sup>83</sup> service by publication, but only to that extent.<sup>84</sup> It supersedes the necessity both of publication and of mailing;<sup>85</sup> but it is not an abandonment of service by publication and will not invalidate it.<sup>86</sup> Under some statutes, at least under certain conditions, personal service outside the state may be made on a resident.<sup>87</sup>

While personal service on a nonresident outside the state, in aid or in lieu of service by publication, is sometimes denominated "substituted service," it must, as discussed supra § 43, be distinguished from the substituted service whereby service on a resident is effected by leaving a copy of the process at the residence, abode, or place of business of defendant; and statutes providing for such substituted service have been held not to authorize personal service outside the state.<sup>88</sup>

Proceedings in rem or in personam. The statutes providing for personal service of process on a nonresident defendant beyond the jurisdiction of the state refer only to actions in rem and cannot confer jurisdiction to determine rights and obligations which are entirely personal;<sup>89</sup> and it is only in cases coming within the statute that jurisdiction can be acquired.<sup>90</sup> Accordingly, service under these

Property of defendant must be within state

A quasi in rem action under which service of process on a nonresident defendant may be authorized is a proceeding against defendant personally although real object is to deal with particular property, and there must be a res within the state on which the judgment can operate without any personal action required of defendant.

N.J.—Solomon v. Yudkin-Krell, Inc., 63 A.2d 715, 2 N.J.Super. 315.

Actions held in rem

(1) State court could proceed in rem or quasi in rem against documents, such as bearer bonds, within its territory; hence substituted personal service on nonresidents outside

Beal or personal property involved

(1) Service of summons may be outside state when subject of action is real or personal property, in or on which defendant has or claims a lien or interest, within state, or relief demanded consists wholly or partly in excluding defendant from any such interest or lien.—State v. Northwestern Nat. Bank of Minneapolis, 18 N.W.2d 569, 219 Minn. 471.

(2) Statute permits substituted service by extraterritorial personal service only where plaintiff seeks to enforce legal or equitable lien or claim, or remove cloud on title, to personalty within district.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., D.C.Mo., 58 F. 2d 810.

Compelling execution of lease

Suit specifically to enforce nonresident defendant's agreement to execute gas lease involving land within state was held not "suit to quiet title to land" so as to give court jurisdiction based on constructive service, but in personam, and constructive service of process was not authorized by statute; and court rules referring to remedies on final process to execute decree, and providing that, when any act required to be done is not done, it may be performed by prothonotary in name of delinquent party, were held inapplicable to question whether court acquired jurisdiction over nonresident defendant by constructive service, even though land in litigation was located in state.—Atlantic Seaboard Natural Gas Co. v. Whitten, 173 A. 305, 315 Pa. 529, 93 A.L.R. 615.

Allegations of complaint as controlling

Ordinarily it is enough, as against a motion to set aside personal service outside the state, that there be found in the complaint allegations which, if proved, would entitle plaintiff to a judgment in rem.—Berson v. Scott, 94 N.Y.S.2d 117.

A quasi in rem action under which service of process on a nonresident defendant may be authorized is a proceeding against defendant personally although real object is to deal with particular property, and there must be a res within the state on which the judgment can operate without any personal action required of defendant.

N.J.—Solomon v. Yudkin-Krell, Inc., 63 A.2d 715, 2 N.J.Super. 315.

Actions held in rem

statutes confers jurisdiction in rem;<sup>91</sup> and no jurisdiction over the person of defendant is acquired thereby<sup>92</sup> unless defendant actually enters an appearance.<sup>93</sup> Jurisdiction will not be defeated because a petition unites with a proceeding in rem another separate cause of action in which service would not confer jurisdiction.<sup>94</sup>

Acknowledgment and acceptance of service. Under or apart from statutes expressly so providing in some jurisdictions, mere acknowledgment or acceptance of service out of the state, in lieu of service by publication, has the same effect as service by publication,<sup>95</sup> and is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction of the person.<sup>96</sup> However, an acknowledgment of such service may, by its terms, confer jurisdiction,<sup>97</sup> as where there is coupled with the admission an agreement to enter an appearance<sup>98</sup> or an indorsement waiving the benefit of the statutes with respect to absent defendants;<sup>99</sup> but in some jurisdictions, where the only method provided by statute for service on a nonresident is by order of publication, it has been held that publication cannot be waived by admission of service made out of the state,<sup>1</sup> even though coupled with an agree-

(2) Proceeding to authorize changing, altering and amending of administrative features of life insurance trust agreement wherein court had jurisdiction of trustee, which was the holder of legal title to life policies, was proceeding in rem in which summons could be served by such substituted service.—Cutter v. American Trust Co., 197 S.E. 542, 213 N. C. 686.

(3) Bankruptcy trustee's suit for rescission of allegedly invalid contracts for purchase of stock of domestic corporations and for enforcement of equitable lien on stock to extent of amount paid on purchase price, was in rem or quasi in rem.—Thompson v. Terminal Shares, C.C.A. Mo., 89 F.2d 652, certiorari denied Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Thompson, 58 S.Ct. 121, 302 U.S. 735, 82 L.Ed. 568.

Actions held not in rem

Action for unliquidated damages for fraud, misrepresentation, and misappropriation in exchange of realty, and for lien against realty involved, was held not in nature of action in rem sustainable on personal service outside state.—Kern v. Wilson, 14 P.2d 1014, 91 Colo. 355.

Impressing trust on realty

The rule that no constructive or extraterritorial service of court's process can bring a nonresident within court's jurisdiction, so as to make such person amenable to court's in personam directions or orders, is inapplicable in equity suit to impress constructive trust on realty within court's territorial jurisdiction and require nonresident defendant to execute deed conveying such realty to plaintiff, as real efficient relief sought by plaintiff is in

b. Requisites

There must be a compliance with statutory provisions authorizing personal service on nonresident defendants beyond the jurisdiction of the state.

The procedure for personal service of process on a nonresident defendant beyond the jurisdiction of the state is wholly statutory<sup>3</sup> and in derogation of the common law,<sup>4</sup> and the statutes must be strictly construed,<sup>5</sup> and strict compliance with the statutory provisions is necessary.<sup>6</sup> The statutes generally require, and it is usually held, that all necessary steps to secure the right to service by publication must be taken, and such service duly ordered, before resort may be had to personal service outside the state;<sup>7</sup> and a statute providing that such service is equivalent to publication has been held to authorize such service only where publication is authorized.<sup>8</sup> However, it has also been held that, while personal service outside the state is equivalent to service by publication, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the requirements of service by publication are not applicable to personal service outside the state.<sup>9</sup> Certainly, where the legislature has declared that personal service outside the state is the equivalent of service by publication within the state, additional elements or requirements beyond those necessary for service by publication cannot be imposed by rules of practice.<sup>10</sup>

necessary to authorize service on a nonresident defendant out of the state<sup>11</sup> unless required by statute.<sup>12</sup> Under a statute so providing, personal service without the state may be made on a resident, in an action for a sum of money only, without the necessity of making an attachment levy on property.<sup>13</sup>

Affidavit or other showing. While under some statutes the filing of an affidavit is not necessary as a preliminary to personal service outside the state,<sup>14</sup> under others an affidavit must be filed,<sup>15</sup> and there must be a compliance with requirements respecting the making and filing of a proper affidavit.<sup>16</sup> Where required, the affidavit must show one of the statutory causes for service by publication.<sup>17</sup> Thus it is frequently required that the affidavit<sup>18</sup> or petition<sup>19</sup> must show that defendant is a nonresident; and in a proper case a statement to that effect may be on information and belief,<sup>20</sup> provided the source of affiant's information or knowledge is disclosed.<sup>21</sup> So also, the facts showing due diligence in an attempt to secure service within the jurisdiction must be set forth;<sup>22</sup> and it is not sufficient to allege the use of due diligence in the words of the statute.<sup>23</sup> Under some statutes the existence of a verified complaint on file, stating a cause of action against a defendant, is an essential prerequisite to an order for such service;<sup>24</sup> and under other statutes not requiring an order for such service, and so providing, a verified complaint alleging all necessary jurisdictional facts is essential to a valid service;<sup>25</sup> but it has also been held that the filing of a complaint is not a prerequisite to a valid personal service in another state.<sup>26</sup>

Order for service. In some jurisdictions the statutes permit service out of the state without the necessity for an order of publication<sup>27</sup> or compliance with the statute in relation thereto.<sup>28</sup> However, under other statutes an order for such service is a prerequisite to personal service outside the jurisdiction;<sup>29</sup> and under such statute personal service without a court order,<sup>30</sup> or based on a void order,<sup>31</sup> is of no legal effect. Nevertheless, even in such jurisdictions, service may be made outside the state without an order of court, under provisions to that effect, in actions affecting title to, or regulating, defining, or limiting an interest in, specific real or personal property within the state;<sup>32</sup> and an action to enforce specific performance of an agreement for the sale of real estate<sup>33</sup> and an action to abate a nuisance<sup>34</sup> have been held to be within the provisions of such a statute; but an intangible right of property, such as an incorporeal interest in patents and in unpatented inventions, has no situs in the state within this provision.<sup>35</sup> An amendment to such statute authorizing personal service outside the state on a resident, under certain conditions, without prior attachment of property, has been held not to limit the provisions permitting service on a nonresident without a court order.<sup>36</sup> If the order provides in the alternative for both publication and personal service outside the state, a defect in the former part of the order will not affect the validity of service had under the latter part.<sup>37</sup>

Bond. Where the statute provides that, when service is had in compliance with its provisions outside the state, it shall be deemed an actual service, it has been held that a bond, required to be filed by a statute providing for service by publication, need not be filed.<sup>38</sup>

Who may serve. Where statutes authorizing personal service on nonresident defendants out of the state provide by whom such service may be made, service, in order to be valid, must be made by the person or officer designated.<sup>39</sup> Thus, where the statute authorizes service by a sheriff, constable, or an officer authorized to acknowledge deeds, a service by a deputy United States marshal has been held insufficient;<sup>40</sup> and likewise a service by a deputy United States marshal has been held invalid under a statute providing for service by a United States marshal.<sup>41</sup> Service outside the state by a sheriff of a foreign jurisdiction, without appointment by the sheriff of the county in which the suit was brought, as required by statute, is insufficient.<sup>42</sup> Where the authorization of the statute is generally to any officer authorized to serve process within the jurisdiction where the service is to be made, the process need not be directed to any particular officer,<sup>43</sup> and it is sufficient if the direction is within the terms of the statute;<sup>44</sup> and the service may be made by a deputy sheriff authorized to make service in the foreign jurisdiction.<sup>45</sup>

Manner of service. Service must be on defendant

Sufficiency of complaint

In order to bring case within such provision it is not enough merely to insert in complaint a prayer for judgment in those terms; complaint itself must also set forth a cause of action in favor of plaintiff entitling him to such judgment.—Axelrod v. Barton Securities Co., 96 N.Y.S.2d 363, 276 App.Div. 578.

Action for specific performance

Court was held not to acquire jurisdiction by service of process outside state in so far as complaint prayed for specific performance of contract for assignment of interest in letters patent; nor does presence in state of chattels necessary for construction of patented machine give court jurisdiction through service of process outside state, where only relief sought on contract was specific performance thereof with regard to assignment of interest in patent.—Ebsary Gypsum Co. v. Ruby, supra.

in person.<sup>46</sup> Only the summons need be served, where the statute does not also require service of the affidavit, order, or complaint;<sup>47</sup> and the summons served must be the same summons ordered to be published,<sup>48</sup> although a summons containing substantially the same information as the original has been held sufficient.<sup>49</sup> Where the statute requires that the complaint, or other paper, such as a notice of the order for service, be served with the summons, the requirements are jurisdictional and the service is rendered fatally defective by a failure to serve a material exhibit as part of the complaint<sup>50</sup> or to file such paper or notice.<sup>51</sup>

§ 74. — When Service Complete

The time when personal service outside the state is complete depends on the provisions of the statute authorizing such service.

Where personal service of a nonresident defendant beyond the jurisdiction of the state is resorted to as a substitute for publication, and the statute prescribes the time when such service should be made and when it becomes complete, such provision is controlling;<sup>52</sup> and the time within which defendant must appear does not begin to run until the service is complete under the provisions of the statute;<sup>53</sup> and where service is not made within the time prescribed it is void.<sup>54</sup> The service in some jurisdictions has been held not complete until the expiration of the time provided for publication,<sup>55</sup> although other courts hold that such service is complete as soon as personal service is in fact made.<sup>56</sup> In those cases where, under the statute, such service can be had without an order, the service is deemed complete on actual service of the summons outside the state.<sup>57</sup>

§ 75. Substituted Service within Jurisdiction

Substituted service within the jurisdiction, if valid against a nonresident, operates only as far as the proceeding is in rem.

Even assuming that substituted service of process within the jurisdiction may be deemed valid against a nonresident, it is only as the equivalent of constructive service by publication and operates only as far as the proceeding is in rem.<sup>58</sup>

§ 76. Mailing

Mailing of process in lieu of publication is considered infra § 77, and mailing of process in aid of publication infra § 78. Personal service by mail is considered supra § 36, and substituted service by mail supra § 51.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 77. — In Lieu of Publication

The validity of service of process on nonresidents by mail or registered mail depends on the rules and statutes in the particular jurisdiction.

Statutes which provide that notice of an action may be given by mail or registered mail to nonresidents have been held to provide merely an alternative method to service by publication.<sup>59</sup> Accordingly, under such statutes, where service by publication would be valid service by mailing is similarly valid;<sup>60</sup> and where service by publication would be invalid service by mailing in lieu thereof is likewise invalid.<sup>61</sup> Such notice is insufficient to give jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against a nonresident on whom no personal service has been had.<sup>62</sup> While statutes providing for the service of process on nonresident defendants by registered mail have been held to be valid where reasonable time and opportunity for defense is given,<sup>63</sup> it has also been held that service on a nonresident by mailing to him a copy by registered letter is not valid.<sup>64</sup> In any event, in order to have an effective service by mail there must be strict compliance with the statutory requirements.<sup>65</sup>

§ 78. — In Aid of Publication

There must be a compliance with the requirements of statutes authorizing service by publication as to the mailing of a copy of the notice, summons, or plaintiff's pleading.

Where it is required, under statutes authorizing service of process by publication, that, when the residence of defendant is known, a copy of the notice or of the summons, order of publication, or warning order, published as notice, and sometimes of plaintiff's first pleading, shall be sent to him at such address by mail, noncompliance with this requirement, which is held to be jurisdictional, renders the service void;<sup>66</sup> and if there are two or more of such defendants a separate notice must be mailed to each defendant sought to be served.<sup>67</sup> However, the statutory requirement as to mailing does not apply where the absent or nonresident defendant's residence is not known<sup>68</sup> and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence.<sup>69</sup>

The statute authorizing mailing, in conjunction with publication, has been held to be comprehensive and to extend to all cases where the principles of due process do not require actual service within the state.<sup>70</sup> Such procedure is, however, insufficient to give a court jurisdiction over the person of defendant, even though he may have received the notice.<sup>71</sup>

Since the only effect of mailing the required papers, or of an affidavit of nonmailing to those defendants whose addresses are unknown, is to complete service by publication,<sup>72</sup> on compliance therewith the service is complete,<sup>73</sup> and the jurisdiction of the court obtains without reference to whether the mailing did or did not impart actual notice to the one to whom it was addressed.<sup>74</sup>

Only where service is by publication, and not personally, is the requirement of mailing applicable.—

Knowledge of defendant's whereabouts

Under statute providing for compelling appearance of nonresident defendant by seizing his property and giving notice to defendant, court must exact from complainant some showing of where defendant can be found.—Cantor v. Sachs, 162 A. 73, 18 Del.Ch. 359.

Alias summons

Where an alias summons issued in a case is a copy of the original summons, the mailing of a copy of the original is a substantial compliance with a statute requiring a copy of the summons to be mailed to defendant.—Harpold v. Doyle, 102 P. 158, 16 Idaho 671.

Allegation in affidavit of nonresidence for service by publication that defendant was believed to reside in another state did not require mailing of copy of summons and complaint to defendant; and statement in attorney's affidavit of service that copy of summons and complaint was mailed to, and refused by, nonresident defendant did not invalidate service by publication where it did not appear whether defendant's residence was learned of after copy of summons and complaint was mailed, or before or after service by publication was completed.—Collins v. Streitz, 54 P.2d 264, 47 Ariz. 146, appeal dismissed 56 S.Ct. 835, 298 U.S. 640, 80 L.Ed. 1373.

Alternative service by other method

If defendant's whereabouts are unknown, resort must be made to alternative service by some method other than notice by mail.—Cantor v. Sachs, 162 A. 73, 18 Del.Ch. 359.

wise the substituted service is void;<sup>75</sup> and it must be mailed at a post office, as designated in the order.<sup>76</sup> While some decisions have held that the deposit of a copy of the summons in a public mail or letter box established by the post office department is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring mailing in a post office,<sup>77</sup> it has also been held that such mailing is insufficient.<sup>78</sup>

Time of mailing. Where by statute the summons and complaint must be mailed to defendant "in pursuance of the order of the court," mailing before the order is made is ineffectual.<sup>79</sup> If required to be deposited in a post office "forthwith," the requirement is satisfied by a deposit within a reasonable time<sup>80</sup> which is to be determined from the facts and circumstances attending the case.<sup>81</sup>

By whom mailed. In the absence of some statutory provision to the contrary,<sup>82</sup> anyone competent to make the required proof thereof may deposit the notice in the post office,<sup>83</sup> except probably the party himself.<sup>84</sup>

not registered in compliance with a rule of court is of no consequence.<sup>85</sup>

Affidavit of mailing. Where an affidavit showing that a copy of the notice has been mailed to the last known address of defendant is made necessary, this requirement is considered to be jurisdictional, and on noncompliance therewith the court acquires no jurisdiction.<sup>86</sup>

Necessity of actual receipt. When service of process is made by mail, the deposit in the post office is the service;<sup>87</sup> and actual receipt of the envelope containing a copy of the summons and complaint is not contemplated by the statute authorizing mailing in aid of publication.<sup>88</sup>

§ 79. Posting in Addition to Publication

Statutory requirements as to posting in addition to publication must be complied with.

The provisions of some statutes that in addition to publication a copy of the notice shall be posted on the courthouse door is a jurisdictional requirement which must be complied with.<sup>89</sup> immune from service of civil process while attending court and for a reasonable time before and after in going to, and returning from, court.

It is almost universally recognized,<sup>90</sup> subject to the exception discussed infra subdivision a (3) of this section, that witnesses in attendance on a court outside the territorial jurisdiction of their residence are immune from service of civil process, while attending court, and for a reasonable time before and after, in going to court and returning to their homes;<sup>91</sup> and this immunity is not taken away by a statute prohibiting arrest of persons attending courts as witnesses.<sup>92</sup> The exemption from service of process has been held to preclude attachment of the books, clothing, and other personal effects of a witness.<sup>93</sup>

The rule applies without regard to the character of the defense which the witness may set up.<sup>94</sup> Moreover, the immunity conferred by it is not affected by the fact that the witnesses have some interest in the action;<sup>95</sup> and this is true even in a jurisdiction where a nonresident plaintiff is held not exempt from service of civil process.<sup>96</sup> Furthermore, the immunity is not limited to witnesses necessarily in attendance,<sup>97</sup> since it is sufficient that they act in good faith in attending on the court for the purpose of giving testimony as required,<sup>98</sup> and they should not be required to determine whether or not their attendance is actually necessary.<sup>99</sup>

(2) Suitors

It is the majority rule that suitors in attendance in a court outside the territorial jurisdiction of their residence are immune from service of civil process while attending court and for a reasonable time before and after in going to, and returning from, court.

The courts are not in harmony on the question whether suitors coming within the jurisdiction of the court are immune from service of process.<sup>4</sup> In the majority of jurisdictions, the rule is now established that, like witnesses, suitors, in attendance in a court outside the territorial jurisdiction of their residence, are, subject to the exception discussed infra subdivision a (3) of this section, immune from service of civil process, while attending court, and for a reasonable time before and after, in going to court and in returning to their homes.<sup>5</sup> In jurisdictions where the majority rule prevails, although an examination of the decisions shows that the party to whom the exemption was in most cases allowed was defendant, yet where the question has been directly raised it has been almost uniformly held that the exemption extends to plaintiffs as well as defendants;<sup>6</sup> and, accordingly, it has been held that the exemption should apply to one who comes into the state for the purpose of filing an action.<sup>7</sup> On the other hand, in a limited number of jurisdictions the reverse of the majority rule above stated is true, the courts holding without qualification that nonresident suitors are under no circumstances entitled to immunity from service of civil process.<sup>8</sup> Moreover, there is yet a third class of jurisdictions, where neither the majority nor minority rule seems to have been definitely adopted, it being held in these jurisdictions that a plaintiff who is a nonresident of the jurisdiction in which he brings suit is not entitled to immunity from service of civil process;<sup>9</sup> and in some of these jurisdictions the courts seem to intimate that exemption from service of civil process should be denied to all suitors, whether plaintiffs or defendants,<sup>10</sup> while in another jurisdiction expressions are used from which it may be inferred that the court would extend immunity to defendants under some circumstances.<sup>11</sup>

Attendance voluntarily or by compulsion. To entitle a suitor to exemption, it is not necessary that a subpoena should have been served on him;<sup>12</sup> and, in fact, it has been held to be essential that he enter the state voluntarily.<sup>13</sup> In determining whether a nonresident has acted or appeared voluntarily or by compulsion in response to a court order, the terms and purpose of the order, and the penalty which may result from failure to comply with it, must be considered.<sup>14</sup>

(3) Relationship between First and Second Cases

The immunity of nonresident witnesses and suitors does not generally apply to process issued in the very cause for which they entered the jurisdiction, or in another cause which is in aid of, or incidental to, or connected with, the original suit.

The rule that nonresident witnesses or suitors are exempt from service of process has been held not to apply to process issued in the very cause for which they entered the jurisdiction, or in another cause which is in aid of, or incidental to, or connected with, the original suit, as where it involves the same parties and subject matter,<sup>15</sup> particularly where the objecting party was the plaintiff in the original suit which he entered the jurisdiction to prosecute,<sup>16</sup> since the granting of an exemption in such circumstances would obstruct rather than expedite the administration of justice in the case.<sup>17</sup> However, this exception to the rule is not universally recognized, and in some jurisdictions it is immaterial that the second case involved the same parties and subject matter.<sup>18</sup> In any event there can be no exception to the rule where the two cases are separate and distinct.<sup>19</sup>

A nonresident defendant in another action, appearing to be examined before trial pursuant to court order which was not served on defendant, was not subject to punishment for contempt of court or imprisonment or fine for failure to appear, and hence his appearance was voluntary and he was privileged from service of process as a defendant in the instant action, notwithstanding defendant made his appearance in the other action to protect himself against the possible entry of judgment against him.—*New England Industries v. ### b. As to Residence or Nonresidence in County

In most jurisdictions the immunity from process of nonresidents applies to witnesses or suitors, who, although residents of the state, are nonresidents of the county in which they are attending court.

The weight of authority is to the effect that the general rule of immunity from civil process for witnesses attending court, stated supra subdivision a (1) of this section, applies with equal force and effect to witnesses resident of the state attending court in a county other than that in which they reside,<sup>20</sup> although in some jurisdictions immunity to such witnesses has either been denied or limited by statute or judicial decision.<sup>21</sup> Generally, the immunity applies even though they are attending voluntarily and not in obedience to a subpoena;<sup>22</sup> but in some jurisdictions the rule is stated to be that a person in a county other than that of his legal residence cannot be legally served with process therein if he is in such county in obedience to legal process or its equivalent.<sup>23</sup>

Suitors. In jurisdictions where the majority rule respecting immunity of suitors in attendance in a court outside the territorial jurisdiction of their residence, discussed supra subdivision a (2) of this section, prevails, it has generally been held that a resident of a state who attends court as a litigant in a county other than that of his residence is privileged from the service of summons in an action brought in that county.<sup>24</sup> However, in some jurisdictions no immunity is granted to a suitor who is a nonresident of the county in which the proceedings are had;<sup>25</sup> and this is true where the question is regarded as essentially one of venue rather than of validity of service,<sup>26</sup> so that the immunity or remedy in the case of such service is merely partial or conditional in that the court may, in its discretion, grant a change of venue<sup>27</sup> if defendant is greatly inconvenienced.<sup>28</sup> same set of facts, was essentially different in that the prior case was brought in a court of limited jurisdiction for the sum of five hundred dollars while the second case was in a court of general jurisdiction for the sum of five thousand dollars, in that the prior case was for injuries to property only while the second case was for injuries to the person as well, and in that the prior case was against an individual defendant while in the second case his corporate employer was also made defendant.—Cotton v. Frazier, 95 S.W.2d 45, 170 Tenn. 301.

(2) An action against a nonresident for services rendered as accountants was not shown to be correlated to action brought in the state by the nonresident against third persons for cancellation of shares of stock to the extent as to justify the service of process on nonresident while in the state conferring with his attorneys in connection with the suit brought by nonresident.—*Grundy v. #### Remedy in particular case

Where by statute a nonresident of a county may be compelled to come into a court of the county by process, it has been held that service on a witness or party residing in another county is not a nullity, but that the court will control the service, and either set it aside or change the venue arising from such service, or otherwise remedy any special disadvantage which such service entails upon the party.—Massey v. Colville, 45 N.J.Law 119, 46 Am.R. 754—50 C.J. p 551 note 23.

In counties in which witnesses or parties reside. In the absence of statute providing otherwise,<sup>29</sup> witnesses and suitors attending court in counties of their residence are not entitled to immunity from service of civil process.<sup>30</sup>

c. As to County or State Other than That in Which Action Pending

Authorities differ as to whether nonresident witnesses or suitors are immune from service of process while passing through another jurisdiction in going to, or returning from, court.

According to some decisions nonresidents of the state who come into the state to attend trial of a cause in which they are suitors are protected from service of civil process of a state through which they have to pass in coming from, or returning to, their homes, as well as from the process of the state in which the cause is tried;<sup>31</sup> but there is also authority directly to the contrary of this proposition, the view being taken that witnesses and suitors are not exempt from service of civil process in any jurisdiction other than that in which their attendance as such is required.<sup>32</sup> It has been held that suitors or witnesses going from one county in a state to another by the most direct route are entitled to claim exemption from service of process while passing through any intermediate county.<sup>33</sup>

d. Basis, Beneficial Purpose, and Personal Nature of Exemption

The exemption of nonresident witnesses or suitors from service of process rests on grounds of public policy and due administration of justice, and, while personal in its nature, is for the benefit of the court rather than of witnesses and parties.

The privilege of immunity from service of civil process extended to nonresident witnesses and suitors is a very ancient one.<sup>34</sup> Stemming from the common law,<sup>35</sup> it has developed gradually in a natural order to its present force and effect,<sup>36</sup> and is not dependent on statutory law.<sup>37</sup> It is an exception to the general rule that a creditor may subject his debtor to service in whatever jurisdiction he finds him.<sup>38</sup>

The exemption rests on grounds of public policy<sup>39</sup> and the due administration of justice,<sup>40</sup> which require that every reasonable method of ascertaining the whole truth in matters before the court should be open to the court,<sup>41</sup> since the court would be

Rule limited to nonresidents

The rule of immunity which protects defendants from service of civil process while attending courts as litigant or witness should be applied to those cases where, but for requirement of attendance on court, defendant, a nonresident, would not be required to come into state, or a defendant residing in another county would not be required to come into county where cause of action arose and thereby be able to avoid service of process in county in which cause of action arose.—Fisher v. often embarrassed and sometimes interrupted if the suitor might be vexed with process while attending on the court for the protection of his rights or the witness attending to testify.<sup>42</sup> It is in the public interest that nonresident suitors and witnesses be encouraged to appear voluntarily,<sup>43</sup> and not deterred from so doing;<sup>44</sup> and unless immunity from service of civil process is given they might be deterred from attending through fear of being subjected to the burden of new litigation,<sup>45</sup> and delays might ensue and injustice be done.<sup>46</sup> Therefore, the courts should protect them against possible litigation by granting immunity from service of civil process and thus removing the liability to such litigation.<sup>47</sup>

It has also been said that the exemption is founded on the principle that, where the law exacts a duty from any person it will protect him in the discharge of it, and that individuals cannot demand the use of public civil process so as to arrest or interfere with others in the performance of public duties or of duties required by public process;<sup>48</sup> and that immunity granted a nonresident witness does not work any injustice to anyone, since, unless he comes within the state, there will be no opportunity to serve any process on him.<sup>49</sup>

Judicial necessities as determinative. The rule granting exemption from service of process should not be enlarged beyond the reason on which it is founded, and should be extended or withheld only as judicial necessities require.<sup>50</sup>

Comity and reciprocity. The principle of state comity has been assigned by some courts as a reason for extending to nonresident witnesses and suitors the privilege of immunity from service of civil process.<sup>51</sup> It has been said, however, that the courts of a state should not deny immunity to nonresident witnesses and suitors merely because it is the rule in the courts of the state in which such witnesses and suitors reside to deny immunity from service of civil process to nonresident witnesses and suitors.<sup>52</sup>

Whether for benefit of witnesses and parties or court. It has been variously stated that the exemption is not for the benefit of the witnesses and parties, but for the benefit of the court,<sup>53</sup> that the protection of courts of justice is the primary object of the rule and the privilege to the individual incidental,<sup>54</sup> and that the exemption is alike for the benefit of the witnesses and parties and of the court.<sup>55</sup>

Personal nature of privilege. The privilege is strictly personal.<sup>56</sup> Hence, where two defendants are sued to enforce a joint liability, and one of them is exempt from service of process in the action, the other cannot oust jurisdiction because of such ex-

e. Persons Entitled

The immunity of witnesses and suitors to service of process extends only to those whose duty requires their attendance in a judicial proceeding and whose presence is necessary to the court.

The immunity of witnesses and suitors from service of civil process is extended to those persons only whose duty requires their attendance in a judicial proceeding<sup>59</sup> and whose presence is necessary to the court in the performance of its function of administering justice.<sup>60</sup> It is not to be extended so far as to exempt all persons voluntarily coming within the jurisdiction of the court from being served,<sup>61</sup> as where they come in merely to investigate transactions,<sup>62</sup> or otherwise attend to matters which may become the subject of litigation<sup>63</sup> or which may eventually reach a trial.<sup>64</sup> While it has been held that the exemption does not apply to persons who enter the jurisdiction merely to consult with attorneys,<sup>65</sup> other authorities have held that the exemption extends to a nonresident who comes into a jurisdiction at the request of his counsel to confer in connection with a pending case.<sup>66</sup>

Bad faith. Since the exemption from service is based on the due administration of justice, as considered supra subdivision d of this section, where justice will not be served, as where the individual seeking the privilege of immunity is not acting in good faith, but collusively, so that injustice will be achieved, the privilege will not be granted.<sup>67</sup>

Officers or agents of corporation. While the contrary doctrine has been asserted,<sup>68</sup> it has been generally held that a nonresident officer or agent of a foreign corporation is exempt from service of process for the commencement of a civil action against the corporation, where he has in good faith come into the state to testify in litigation in which his corporation is engaged<sup>69</sup> or as a witness for the state in a criminal prosecution,<sup>70</sup> or where he is in attendance under subpoena to appear before the grand jury,<sup>71</sup> or for the sole purpose of consulting the attorneys of his corporation with reference to certain rights which it claims to have in property involved in litigation to which the corporation was a party.<sup>72</sup> It has also been held that such officer or agent who has come into the state to testify as a witness in litigation in which the corporation is engaged is exempt from service of process for the commencement of a civil action against himself in his individual capacity;<sup>73</sup> and, similarly, where a nonresident enters the jurisdiction to testify as a witness in a private or some other capacity, he cannot be served with process as director of a foreign corporation.<sup>74</sup>

In jurisdictions where witnesses, residents of the state, attending court in a county other than that in which they reside are exempt from service of civil process, in accordance with the rule discussed supra subdivision b of this section, an officer or agent of a domestic corporation attending as a witness in a county other than that in which the corporation is domiciled is exempt from service of civil process for commencement of a civil action against the corporation of which he is an officer or agent.<sup>75</sup> However, no such immunity exists where by statute summons could have been served on the corporation in the county of its domicile;<sup>76</sup> and under a statute providing that in an action against a corporation summons shall be served by delivering a copy through the president, it has been held that, if the corporation is a domestic corporation, and its president, who is a nonresident of the state, comes into the state to attend court either as a suitor or witness, he may be served with process in an action against the corporation, since no relief is sought against him in his individual capacity.<sup>77</sup>

§ 81. Proceedings in Which Exemption May Be Claimed

The exemption from service of civil process applies to all proceedings judicial in nature, whether or not they take place in court, including examinations before trial, taking of depositions, and hearings in bankruptcy proceedings.

The right to exemption from service of civil process may be claimed in all proceedings which are in their nature judicial, whether or not they take place in court;<sup>78</sup> but it does not extend to matters which are not judicial suits or proceedings in their nature.<sup>79</sup> Thus the exemption extends to attendance before any subordinate tribunal or officer before whom proceedings necessary in the trial or hearing of the cause are had,<sup>80</sup> such, for instance, as an arbitrator appointed by rule of court,<sup>81</sup> masters, commissioners, examiners, or referees in chancery,<sup>82</sup> and magistrates.<sup>83</sup> So also it has been held that the privilege extends to witnesses in attendance before a grand jury,<sup>84</sup> to persons attending a statutory proceeding before the attorney general,<sup>85</sup> to parties and witnesses in summary proceedings for dispossession under a landlord and tenant statute,<sup>86</sup> to parties to an interference proceeding in the patent office,<sup>87</sup> and to attendance before a register of wills whose jurisdiction over matters of probate is judicial by a foreign executor on a citation requiring him to file the will of decedent within a designated time.<sup>88</sup> It has also been held to extend to witnesses attending a hearing before a legislative committee<sup>89</sup> or before a commission making authorized official inquiry into affairs relating to matters deeply affecting public interest and having, among other powers, the power to subpoena witnesses.<sup>90</sup> It has even been held that one who attends an appeal in an action in which he is a party is entitled to the exemption.<sup>91</sup> Attendance by a managing officer of a foreign corporation who is in the state to attend a sale of land under a decree of court in which the corporation was a party is not an attendance on a judicial proceeding so as to exempt him from service of summons in an action against the corporation.<sup>92</sup>

of the department of motor vehicles empowered to determine and hear complaints and enforce his findings by suspending privileges, revoking licenses, and by fine and imprisonment, according to the particular violation;<sup>93</sup> but it has been held not to apply to persons attending an investigation to determine whether a ticket will issue against a person involved in an automobile accident.<sup>94</sup>

Examination before trial. A person entering the jurisdiction in order to testify at an examination before trial in connection with an action to which he is a party is entitled to the immunity<sup>95</sup> even though the order to appear for such examination was served on his attorney rather than on him personally.<sup>96</sup>

Taking of depositions. Witnesses or parties to whom immunity from service of civil process would be extended while attending court are, according to the weight of authority, entitled to immunity from service of civil process while attending the taking of depositions to be used in the trial of a cause in which they are interested as parties or witnesses,<sup>97</sup> although it has been held in some jurisdictions that a nonresident within the state for the purpose of taking depositions to be used in an action in which he is a party in his own state is not exempt from service of civil process,<sup>98</sup> and that exemption will not be extended to a party acting as his own solicitor to take depositions in pursuance of a notice in a county other than his residence.<sup>99</sup> Under the majority rule stated first above, the fact that a witness is attending without any subpoena having been served will not affect the privilege;<sup>1</sup> and it has also been held that the privilege is not affected by the fact that the depositions were taken by agreement rather than on a notice and by service of a subpoena,<sup>2</sup> or by the fact that the depositions were taken before a notary, where by statute a witness may be compelled by process or rule to attend before such officer.<sup>3</sup> It has also been held not to affect the rule that the purpose of having the deposition taken was to make opposing counsel erroneously believe that the deposing witness would not be present at the trial and that there was in fact no intention of using the deposition.<sup>4</sup> The rule has been applied both to parties and witnesses who are nonresidents of the state<sup>5</sup> and to those who, although they are residents of the state, are nonresidents of the county in which the depositions are taken,<sup>6</sup> and to cases where nonresidents of the state attend the taking of depositions within the state to be used in the trial of an action in another state.<sup>7</sup>

Hearings in bankruptcy proceedings. Hearings before referees or commissioners in bankruptcy are judicial hearings within the rule exempting witnesses and parties from service of civil process while attending a judicial hearing outside the jurisdiction in which they reside.<sup>8</sup>

Entry into jurisdiction to effect settlement. The entry of a person into a state for the purpose of effecting a settlement or compromise of a case to which he is a party is not an entry for a judicial hearing and does not render him immune to service<sup>9</sup> except in so far as such entry may have been the result of his adversary's fraud or deceit, as discussed supra § 39.

§ 82. Persons Charged with Crime or Confined in Prison

plead, or be tried in a criminal prosecution against him is exempt from service of civil process.

In a majority of jurisdictions a nonresident of the state who comes into the state for the purpose of appearing, pleading, or being tried in a criminal prosecution against him is exempt from service of civil process while attending court, and for a reasonable time before and after in going to court and returning to his home;<sup>10</sup> and the same exemption has been extended to defendant who resides in a county other than that in which the prosecution is had.<sup>11</sup>

In jurisdictions where the foregoing principles prevail, exemption has been extended both in cases where the attendance is involuntary,<sup>12</sup> and in cases where it is voluntary.<sup>13</sup> Accordingly, exemption has frequently been extended to defendants who were nonresidents of the state or county in which the criminal prosecution was pending, and who, after waiving extradition and coming voluntarily into the state,<sup>14</sup> or who, after being arrested in a state or county other than that of their residence, gave bond<sup>15</sup> or deposited collateral<sup>16</sup> for their appearance, and whose appearance was in pursuance thereof. It has been held that the rule applies to a proceeding before a justice of the peace, even though no warrant had been issued or indictment returned.<sup>17</sup>

The above rules are not universally accepted, and there are some decisions not in harmony therewith.<sup>18</sup> Thus, in some decisions, it is held that a defendant in a criminal case is not immune from service of civil process.<sup>19</sup> In others, the rule is limited so as to grant immunity to cases where the attendance is voluntary, but not where it is involuntary,<sup>20</sup> unless, as appears supra § 39, the

In North Carolina

Under provisions to that effect, a defendant in a criminal proceeding is not immune to the service of process, except where he is brought into the state by or after waiver of extradition proceedings, and even then the exemption is limited to process in civil actions arising out of the same facts as the criminal proceedings on which the extradition proceedings were based; and defendant who is in state as required by a bail bond is not exempt from service of process.—White v. Ordille, 50 S.E.2d 499, 299 N.C. 490—Hare v. Hare, 46 S.E.2d 840, 228 N.C. 740—50 C.J. p 557 note 7 [d].

50 C.J. p 557 note 7 [a].

Reason for rule

Since the obvious reason of the rule is to encourage voluntary attendance on courts and to expedite the administration of justice, that reason fails when a suitor or witness is brought into the jurisdiction of a court while under arrest or other compulsion of law; since such a suitor or witness does nothing to encourage or promote voluntary submission to judicial proceedings.—Broadus v. Partrick, 149 S.W.2d 71, 177 Tenn. 335—Anderson v. Atkins, 29 S.W.2d 248, 161 Tenn. 187—50 C. J. p 557 note 7 [a] (3).

prosecution is instituted in bad faith for the bare purpose of bringing such person into the jurisdiction to be served with civil process; and accordingly, there is no exemption where defendant appears pursuant to bond or recognizance given on his arrest.<sup>21</sup> In some jurisdictions, it has been held that one who is voluntarily in the state to answer a criminal charge is not exempt from service of summons in a civil action,<sup>22</sup> but that the exemption does apply to one who is involuntarily in the state, as where he has been extradited and imprisoned.<sup>23</sup>

Persons confined in prison. A person confined in jail on a criminal charge<sup>24</sup> or imprisoned on conviction for such charge<sup>25</sup> is subject to service of civil process, irrespective of the question of residence, at least if he was voluntarily in the jurisdiction at the time of the arrest and confinement.<sup>26</sup> A jail, it has been said, possesses no "privilege of sanctuary."<sup>27</sup>

§ 83. Person Voluntarily Seeking Hearing before Grand Jury

Service of process may be had on an accused person who voluntarily seeks a hearing before a grand jury in a county other than that of his residence.

Service of process may be had on an accused person who voluntarily seeks a hearing before a grand jury in a county other than that of his residence, since he has no lawful occasion to attend a hearing before the grand jury.<sup>28</sup>

§ 84. Persons Performing Public Duties

One who temporarily enters a jurisdiction other than that of his domicile, solely for the performance of a public duty, may be privileged from service of civil process.

One who temporarily enters a state or district other than that of his domicile, solely for the performance of a duty of a public nature, or to which a public interest attaches, is generally privileged from service of civil process for a reasonable time in going to, returning from, and attending on, the performance of such duty.<sup>29</sup> However, where the majority rule as to the exemption of suitors does not prevail, it has been held that the above exemption does not apply;<sup>30</sup> and a fortiori it will not apply where the person served was not acting in a governmental capacity.<sup>31</sup>

A statute providing that a police officer or patrolman while actually on duty shall not be liable to arrest on civil process or to service of subpoena from civil courts has been held not to render such officer immune from service of a summons and motion papers in a civil action.<sup>32</sup>

Federal court process

(1) A summons, as distinguished from a warrant, under federal rule is not compulsory process, and hence a nonresident who entered the state in response to such a summons entered the state voluntarily and was immune from civil process while coming to and going from place of such attendance, and immunity from a civil order of arrest issued in aid of judgment for unpaid arrears of alimony was not lost where, after he had pleaded to indictment, defendant was held by federal court in bail, which he furnished.—Kreiger v. Kreiger, 71 N.Y.S.2d 448, affirmed 72 N.Y.S.2d 403, 272 App.Div. 880, appeal dismissed 75 N.E.2d 629, 297 N.Y. 616, appeal denied 75 N.Y.S.2d 291, 272 App.Div. 1053.

(2) Where nonresident did not voluntarily appear in federal court to answer to information against him, but was present under subpoena to attend, he was under "compulsion" of federal process and hence not immune from service of process of state court.—Casino Fabrics v. Alprent, 43 N.Y.S.2d 260.

Reason for rule

The statute is founded on the concept that the public interests would sustain a detriment if policemen, while discharging the functions of their office, might be arrested on civil process, or in compliance with a mandate, be compelled to leave their posts of duty to serve as witnesses; but the service of a sum-

§ 85. Electors

Under some statutes the service of civil process on an elector is prohibited during the time appointed for election of state and county officers.

A statute, prohibiting the service of civil process on an elector during the time appointed for election of state and county officers, extends to all writs, whether original or judicial, and to every warrant or summons by which a man is called into court to answer in a civil action as a party.<sup>33</sup> However, the statute is not violated by the filing and service of a declaration which has never been regarded in the law as "civil process."<sup>34</sup>

§ 86. Jurors

Jurors are not ordinarily exempt from service of civil process except in so far as it may interfere with their duties as jurors.

Under a statute providing against the service of any writ or other process on the body of a juror, jurors are not exempt from the service of civil process without arrest during the time they are attending court.<sup>35</sup> Moreover, it has been held that, in the absence of any statute prohibiting the service of civil process on a juror, an order in supplemental proceedings for examination of a judgment debtor may be served on him while a juror in court,<sup>36</sup> but where such proceedings interfere with his duties as a juror, that matter can be presented on a motion for that purpose.<sup>37</sup>

§ 87. Persons Observing Day as Holy Day

Under some statutes, service of process returnable

on a Saturday on a person who keeps Saturday as a holy day is void.

Under a statute making it an offense to serve any civil process returnable on Saturday on any person who keeps Saturday as holy time, process is void where the party has caused it to be returned on Saturday which is observed as holy by the party on whom the process is served.<sup>38</sup> Although the statute does not in express terms forbid the return of legal process on a day regarded as holy by the party on whom it is served, the penalty which it imposes implies a prohibition.<sup>39</sup>

§ 88. Waiver or Loss of Immunity

- a. In general
- b. Attending to other business while in jurisdiction
- c. Unreasonable delay in coming or going

a. In General

Immunity from service of civil process may be waived or lost by acts or omissions of a person otherwise entitled thereto, as by a failure to claim the privilege or to assert it promptly or in the proper manner.

Since the immunity is personal in its nature, service of civil process on one who is entitled to immunity from such service is not void, but merely voidable;<sup>40</sup> and the immunity may be waived or lost by acts or omissions of a person otherwise entitled thereto.<sup>41</sup>

Claiming privilege; delay. The privilege may be waived not only by failure to assert it at all,<sup>42</sup> but also by failure to assert it promptly,<sup>43</sup> or by failure

Objections held too late

Defendant's objections, in divorce action, to jurisdiction over his person while being held under criminal to assert it in the proper manner;<sup>44</sup> and in case of failure to assert the privilege promptly, it is immaterial whether or not the delay was an intentional act of bad faith, since its effect would be the same.<sup>45</sup> The privilege must be claimed at as early a stage of the proceedings as possible;<sup>46</sup> and failure to claim the privilege until after it is too late to obtain service of another summons,<sup>47</sup> or until after verdict,<sup>48</sup> or judgment<sup>49</sup> against one otherwise entitled to the privilege, constitutes a waiver thereof; and the privilege is likewise waived where motion to set it aside is not made until two months after the summons of attachment and garnishee processes.<sup>50</sup>

Commission of act giving cause of action while in attendance. While it has been held that witnesses and suitors who are nonresidents of the state forfeit their right of exemption by the commission of a wrongful act during the time the exemption is in force, which gives a cause of action against them,<sup>51</sup> and while the same rule has been applied in respect of witnesses and suitors in a cause being heard in a county other than that of their residence,<sup>52</sup> the supreme court of the United States has reached the conclusion to the contrary on the ground that the exemption is for the benefit of the court rather than of the witness and must be upheld with inflexibility for its benefit.<sup>53</sup>

nity, of his attending to other business while in the jurisdiction, courts are divided between two theories, the "sole purpose doctrine," and the "controlling reason doctrine."

In applying the principle of immunity, and in determining the effect, on a nonresident's immunity, of his attending to other business in the jurisdiction, the courts are divided between two theories, which may be termed the "sole purpose doctrine" and the "controlling reason doctrine."<sup>54</sup>

"Sole purpose doctrine." The "sole purpose doctrine" takes the view that to entitle a nonresident witness or suitor to exemption against service of process it is indispensable that he should have come into the state for the sole purpose of appearing as a witness or suitor in the pending litigation;<sup>55</sup> and that, if he is in the state for any other cause besides attendance on the suit, the ground of exemption ceases, and he is subject to service of civil process.<sup>56</sup> Where this view prevails, if a nonresident party and witness comes into the state for the double purpose of attending court and attending to business which has no connection with the trial, the privilege does not attach to him;<sup>57</sup> and a nonresident witness forfeits his exemption from service of process by unnecessarily prolonging his stay and attending to business of a private nature.<sup>58</sup> However, one who enters the jurisdiction for the sole purpose of appearing as a witness is not thereby required to refrain from other activities while visiting the jurisdiction, under penalty of submitting himself to service of process.<sup>59</sup> Accordingly, the exemption is not process on his extradition from another state, not made until five months after order for body attachment, and after completion of all orders, except order overruling motion to vacate previous orders, were held too late.—Norquist v. Norquist, 4 P. 2d 306, 89 Colo. 486.

Nonresident who comes into state to be tried on an indictment is not exempt from service of civil process where, after adjournment of trial, he attends conference at suggestion of court with his wife's solicitor to submit proof of his financial inability to support his wife.—Morgan v. Morgan, 183 A. 258, 15 N. J.Misc. 101, affirmed 192 A. 508, 122 N.J.Eq. 2.

59. Mont.—State ex rel. American Laundry Machinery Co. v. Second lost merely because a witness visited friends and participated in normal social activities while in the jurisdiction;<sup>60</sup> and the mere fact that a nonresident witness while attending a trial executed a certificate of copartnership relative to business he was then interested in carrying on will not defeat the exemption;<sup>61</sup> and the fact that a nonresident witness while necessarily detained on the trial incidentally attended a business conference which did not constitute business other than that of attending the trial did not defeat the exemption.<sup>62</sup> Certainly, where a nonresident has entered the jurisdiction to testify as a witness, his immunity is not affected by the fact that he intends subsequently to remain for the purpose of enjoying a vacation.<sup>63</sup>

"Controlling reason doctrine." The "controlling reason doctrine" takes the view that a nonresident witness or suitor should be entitled to the exemption if the main and controlling cause or reason for his coming into the state was to attend the trial of a cause as witness or suitor;<sup>64</sup> but that, if the desire to transact other business not connected with the litigation was the controlling motive that brought him within the jurisdiction of the court, he is not entitled to exemption.<sup>65</sup> Where this view prevails, it has been held that, where the main and controlling cause or reason for a nonresident witness' or suitor's presence in the state is to attend on court business, his immunity is not lost, although, while in attendance on such business, he may transact some other business not connected therewith,<sup>66</sup> provided he does not voluntarily remain in the state after the trial after the reasonable time allowed for departure.<sup>67</sup>

The right of a nonresident to assert and claim immunity from civil process while attending court and coming to it and going from it may be forfeited by unreasonable delays in such comings and goings.

While the immunity of nonresident witnesses or suitors or persons charged with crime covers not only the time of actual attendance on the litigation, but also a reasonable time in coming into the jurisdiction, and leaving it and returning to their homes after the purpose of attendance has been fulfilled, it has been held that unreasonable delays in such comings and goings may result in a forfeiture of the right to assert and claim the immunity.<sup>68</sup> It has been said, however, that a reasonable latitude should be allowed,<sup>69</sup> that a person going to, or returning from, court need not take the most direct route,<sup>70</sup> or, in returning, set out for home immediately,<sup>71</sup>

Where petitioner came into state and sought custody of his son from maternal grandmother, but spent eight days in state before commencing habeas corpus proceedings to secure custody, reasonable inference was that petitioner's controlling purpose of coming into state was to avoid litigation, and therefore petitioner was not exempt from service of process in another action.—Franklin v. ### Transportation difficulties

Nonresident, who entered state for sole purpose of testifying in action pending against him which was set down for trial for February 1st, was justified in assuming, when he made railroad reservation for return to his home in California, that his presence in New York would be required until and that reasonable deviations or delays will be allowed,<sup>72</sup> provided they do not arise in carrying out a purpose entirely distinct from the purpose of going to, attending, or returning from, court.<sup>73</sup>

What is reasonable time, it has been said, is a question of fact to be ascertained from the evidence adduced in the circumstances of each particular case.<sup>74</sup>

§ 89. Protection and Enforcement of Privilege

Process issued in violation of the immunity granted to a nonresident while within the state attending trial is illegal; and the immunity may be claimed by a motion to set aside service, a plea to the jurisdiction, or an answer.

Process issued in violation of the immunity granted to a nonresident while within the state attending trial is illegal and the court issuing such process does not acquire jurisdiction thereby,<sup>75</sup> unless there has been a waiver or forfeiture of such privilege, as discussed supra § 88. A claim of immunity or privilege may be asserted by an answer presenting only that question,<sup>76</sup> and perhaps the claim may be asserted by a plea to the jurisdiction.<sup>77</sup> The privilege may not be asserted by a motion to dismiss the action;<sup>78</sup> and such immunity may not be raised by a general appearance but is required to be raised by a special

Whether an exemption from the service of process, as a matter of public policy, exists in any given case depends on the particular facts of each case.<sup>80</sup>

Motion to set aside or quash service. Motions to set aside or quash the service filed in the court in which the action is pending are very generally recognized as an appropriate method to assert the privilege.<sup>81</sup> A notice of motion to set aside service may be signed by an attorney.<sup>82</sup> The notice need not suggest by what method service may be obtained on the party claiming the privilege.<sup>83</sup> Inasmuch as no issue as to the truth or falsity of the return of the officer serving the process is involved, it is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain proceeding that the officer be made a party thereto.<sup>84</sup> It is not a ground for demurrer to the motion that issues raised in the motion should be tried by jury.<sup>85</sup> Where a motion to set aside service is overruled, the remedy is to except, answer, and appeal from the final judgment.<sup>86</sup> Where a suitor appears and moves to quash the service of process the court is thereby deprived of jurisdiction to proceed;<sup>87</sup> and this has been held to be true even though there may be a statute to the effect that where a summons or service thereof is quashed on motion of defend-at least February 7th, and in view of prevalent transportation difficulties he was immune from service of process until departure on February 7th, although plaintiff discontinued pending action on February 2d.—Cohen v. Lindstrom, 47 N.Y.S.2d 734, affirmed 50 N.Y.S.2d 167, 266 App. Div. 765.

ant, defendant shall be deemed to have entered his appearance to the succeeding term of court.<sup>88</sup>

Presumptions and burden of proof. Irrespective of the method by which it is sought to assert the privilege, the presumption is that the service is regular,<sup>89</sup> and the burden is on the person claiming the privilege to establish the contrary.<sup>90</sup>

Affidavits may be employed to establish facts in proceedings to assert the privilege;<sup>91</sup> and the fact that such affidavits state conclusions and ultimate facts does not render them objectionable.<sup>92</sup> The affidavit of the person asserting the privilege, if not contradicted, either specifically or by proof of conflicting circumstances, is sufficient to establish the claim of privilege.<sup>93</sup>

III. RETURN AND PROOF OF SERVICE

§ 90. Definition, Nature, and Necessity of Return

- a. Definition and nature
- b. Necessity

a. Definition and Nature

A return of process is a written statement by the officer to whom the process is directed certifying what he has done pursuant to the command of the process or in connection with the service thereof.

A return of process is a statement in writing indorsed thereon or annexed thereto by the officer to whom it is directed, certifying to the court what he has done pursuant to the command of the process or in connection with the service thereof;<sup>94</sup> the officer's answer touching what he is commanded to do by the writ;<sup>95</sup> the bringing of a process into court with such indorsements as the law requires, whether they are true or false;<sup>96</sup> an official statement by an officer of what he has done in obedience to a command from a superior authority, or why he has done nothing, whichever is required.<sup>97</sup> The purpose of the officer's return is to give evidence of the fact that service has been had in conformity with the command of the process,<sup>98</sup> and to put on the record the statement of a responsible official that notice has been given to defendant of the proceedings against him.<sup>99</sup> The return is an official act,<sup>1</sup> and constitutes the official oath of the officer as to the facts stated in the return.<sup>2</sup> The term also has the more literal meaning of bringing the process back to the court from which it issues or filing it therein.<sup>3</sup>

part of a writing constitutes the return, the return of the officer is that, and that only, to which he signs his name when he returns the writ.<sup>4</sup>

A return of process, as distinguished from the process itself, is merely the evidence by which the court is informed that defendant has been served or given notice to appear in court.<sup>5</sup> It has been said that the citation is the thing, so to speak, while the return is merely evidence thereof.<sup>6</sup> One may be valid and the other incomplete;<sup>7</sup> and a citation may be fatally defective notwithstanding the return indicates that a legal citation has been had.<sup>8</sup>

b. Necessity

While the service of process, rather than a return or proof of service, is the jurisdictional requisite, nevertheless a proper return is ordinarily necessary in order that service may be shown to have been duly made.

It is generally considered that the service of process, rather than a return or proof of service, is the jurisdictional requisite, and that the court acquires jurisdiction, if at all, through proper service, and not through the return thereof.<sup>9</sup> It has been held that in the absence of statutory requirement thereof a return need not be made,<sup>10</sup> and if made in such case has only the force of a private memorandum of the person making it.<sup>11</sup> In order, however, that service may be shown to have been duly made, a proper return is ordinarily necessary,<sup>12</sup> and without it the trial court is not authorized to find that it has jurisdiction;<sup>13</sup> and there is authority to the effect that legal proof of the service of a summons, whether personally or by publication, is a jurisdictional matter.<sup>14</sup>

§ 91. Who May Prove Service by Return

§ 92. To Whom Made

A return of process should be made to the court or officer designated by the process.

A return of process should be made to the court or officer designated by the process.<sup>18</sup> A statutory provision designating the officer to whom the return should be made has been held to be merely directory and not to render void process returned to a wrong officer.<sup>19</sup>

§ 93. Time for Making Return

Process should not be returned prematurely or at a time later than that fixed by statute; but by leave of court process may be returned after the lawful return day in a proper case.

At common law process may be returned at the term in which it was issued or at the next term thereafter;<sup>20</sup> and where it is returnable only in term it cannot validly be returned in vacation.<sup>21</sup> The day on which it is to be returned is, in most jurisdictions, however, dependent on statutory provision,<sup>22</sup> and is called the "return day."<sup>23</sup>

Prematureness. Process should not be returned prior to the proper return day unless defendant is sooner found and served;<sup>24</sup> and a return made before the return day, where service has not been had, is premature and invalid,<sup>25</sup> and no subsequent proceeding can be predicated on it.<sup>26</sup> The sheriff is not required to make his return of service before the return day named in the writ.<sup>27</sup>

Lateness. By leave of court process may be returned after the lawful return day,<sup>28</sup> unless the term at which it was returnable has closed;<sup>29</sup> and, unless otherwise provided by statute, delay in making a return or proof of service beyond the proper time therefor does not necessarily invalidate the service itself or deprive the court of jurisdiction,<sup>30</sup> even where leave of court has not been obtained.<sup>31</sup> Such proof may be supplied even after judgment.<sup>32</sup>

Nunc pro tunc entry

Where there has been no return of service but it appears that defendant has in fact been served, the return of service may be made, on motion, by an entry nunc pro tunc.—Elliott v. Porch, 200 S.E. 190, 59 Ga.App. 181.

31. Neb.—Graves v. Macfarland, 79 N.W. 707, 58 Neb. 802. 50 C.J. p 562 note 16.

Better practice

A return of service made after the return day and after expiration of the term of court will not be stricken as too late, where the return avers personal service on the return day of the writ; while it may be better practice to obtain leave of court to return the writ after term time, such leave would be granted on application.—Boarman v. Bedway, 43 Pa.Dist. & Co. 241.

32. U.S.—Von Arx v. Boone, Alaska, 193 F. 612, 113 C.C.A. 480.

served or not, if no return of service is made within the time limit fixed by law, the writ is considered to be abandoned; and with its abandonment the action is no longer pending.<sup>33</sup> Under some statutes, if process is not returned within a prescribed period after the date of the commencement of the action, the trial court has no jurisdiction to proceed, unless defendant has appeared;<sup>34</sup> on the day that the prescribed period expires the trial court loses jurisdiction to make any order other than a dismissal of the action.<sup>35</sup>

§ 94. Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Return

- a. In general
- b. Service on multiple defendants
- c. By whom and in whose name made

a. In General

A return of process should show the existence or doing of everything necessary to constitute a good service or execution, although in the absence of statute it need not be in any particular form.

Except where prescribed by statute, the form in which a return of process should be made is left to the officer executing the writ.<sup>36</sup> The return should show on its face the existence or doing of everything necessary to constitute a good service or execution;<sup>37</sup> but it need not be couched in the language of the statute,<sup>38</sup> since any other language which shows compliance with the statute is effectual and sufficient.<sup>39</sup> Where an action is deemed commenced by the delivery of process to an officer for service, the return should also show when the process was received,<sup>40</sup> but in other cases the time of receipt need not be shown.<sup>41</sup>

It must appear that the process served was that in the particular action or proceeding wherein the return is produced.<sup>42</sup> A sheriff making a return need not name therein the county of which he is sheriff;<sup>43</sup> nor need he designate himself as sheriff, since the court is presumed to know its own officers.<sup>44</sup> In general, the return need show nothing which already appears of record elsewhere;<sup>45</sup> but it must not depend on facts extraneous to the process to which it relates, in order to render it intelligible.<sup>46</sup> Redundancy or surplusage will not vitiate a return.<sup>47</sup>

Verification. Unless otherwise provided by law,<sup>48</sup> an officer's return of process need not be verified,<sup>49</sup> except, it would seem, when made by an officer of and in a state other than that in which the action is brought or pending.<sup>50</sup>

Alterations. Erasures or interlineations subsequently found in a return of process will not nullify a judgment based on it which recites that the process was served on defendant.<sup>51</sup>

b. Service on Multiple Defendants

Where there are two or more defendants, a return of process should show on which ones service was made, and the time and manner of service on each.

In the case of two or more defendants a return of process should show clearly on which ones service was made, and when and how it was made on each;<sup>52</sup> and a return showing service on one, but silent as to another, is not sufficient to show that service was had on such other.<sup>53</sup> Where process runs to more than one county, a general return of execution applies only to such of defendants as reside within the county to which the process issued.<sup>54</sup>

Delivery of copies. Where a copy of the process is required by statute to be delivered to each of the defendants, the return must show a delivery to each.<sup>55</sup> In some cases a return reciting service on two or more defendants by delivery of "a" copy has been held to be sufficient to show the delivery of a copy to each of the defendants,<sup>56</sup> but in other cases such a return has been held fatally defective.<sup>57</sup> The fact that an officer whose return recites service on all the defendants charges fees for the service of a number of copies equal to the number of defendants has been held to show that each defendant was served with a copy of the process;<sup>58</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>59</sup>

c. By Whom and In Whose Name Made

A return should be made by the officer who served or attempted to serve it, and, where the process is directed to a particular officer, the return should be made in the name of that officer.

A return of process should be made and signed by the officer who in fact served or attempted to serve it.<sup>60</sup> Moreover, as to writs directed to a particular officer and requiring a return thereon, the return should be made in the name of that officer.<sup>61</sup> However, a return may be made by a deputy under his principal's direction;<sup>62</sup> and the fact that the return is made by a deputy other than the one who served the process has been held not to render it insufficient where the return is otherwise regular in form and substance and shows proper service on its face.<sup>63</sup> When service has been made by a deputy, the return may be signed by the principal.<sup>64</sup>

A deputy ordinarily should sign a return of process executed by him in the name of his principal by himself as deputy, or should designate the officer for whom he purported to act;<sup>65</sup> and so in some jurisdictions a return by a deputy in his own name is invalid,<sup>66</sup> except where his principal has died,<sup>67</sup> but in others it is held to be sufficient.<sup>68</sup>

§ 95. — Particular Matters to Be Shown

A return of process should show the time, place, and manner of service, the name of the party served, and other particular matters required to make it sufficient.

A return of service of process should show the time of service;<sup>69</sup> but it need be stated or indicated only with reasonable certainty.<sup>70</sup> When a single date appears in the return, without any designation to the contrary, it is ordinarily deemed to refer to the time of service and not to the time of return.<sup>71</sup> The file mark of the clerk, indorsed on the return, showing that it was filed with him at a time when the process was still in force, is sufficient to show that service was made at a proper time.<sup>72</sup>

Place of service. In some jurisdictions, a return of service of process must show the place where service was made;<sup>73</sup> but in others such

Return held sufficient

Service of summons was not invalidated by reason of erroneous recital in return that service was made at named city in particular county whereas service was actually made in another place in such county, since service in the county is sufficient and recital in return referring showing is not required.<sup>74</sup> The venue given at the head of the return will be taken as indicative of the place of service when no other place is mentioned in the return.<sup>75</sup>

Name of party served. A return of service of process should give the name of the party served or should designate him with such reasonable certainty as to leave no substantial doubt as to his identity,<sup>76</sup> and should show that the service was made on the person to whom the process was directed;<sup>77</sup> but strict accuracy is not required.<sup>78</sup> The full name need not be given, as long as the party served is sufficiently identified;<sup>79</sup> and he need not be designated by name at all if he is described as the party named in the process wherein his name is set forth.<sup>80</sup> However, a return omitting to name or designate the party purported to have been served is insufficient.<sup>81</sup>

Manner of service. A return of service of process should show clearly and fully the manner in which service was made, so that it may appear of record whether the statutory requirements as to manner of service have been substantially complied with.<sup>82</sup> However, if the return, taken in its entirety, fairly imports that it was served in the manner required by law, it is sufficient.<sup>83</sup>

Delivery of copy or other documents. Where it is required that a copy of the petition or complaint<sup>84</sup> or of the process<sup>85</sup> be delivered to, or left with, defendant, or that other papers or writings be served therewith,<sup>86</sup> the return should show compliance with such requirement.

Mode authorized only in specified cases. Where service is permitted to be made on particular persons or in a particular manner only in certain contingencies or at certain places, the existence of such conditions should appear when the return shows service on any such person or in such manner,<sup>87</sup> as where substituted service is authorized only when defendant cannot be found,<sup>88</sup> or where service on a resident agent is permissible when defendant is a nonresident.<sup>89</sup>

Substituted service. When a statute provides for substituted service of process by leaving a copy at the residence or place of business of defendant, or other place, or with certain designated persons, to city was surplusage.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Hooy, 274 N.W. 803, 281 Mich. 307.

50 C.J. p 566 note 63.

Return held insufficient

Statement in sheriff's return that service was made on named individual of a firm which was the named defendant was held not sufficient compliance with statute making return prima facie evidence of agency of person served.—Cain, Wolcott & Rankin v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 141 So. 686, 225 Ala. 44.

78. Ky.—Corpus Juris quoted in James v. Miller, 113 S.W.2d 473, 475, 272 Ky. 115.

Better practice

While it is the better practice for officers to make their returns with that degree of particularity necessary to show exactly on whom the process was served, the failure to do so does not invalidate the service.—State v. Moore, 55 S.E.2d 177, 230 N. C. 648.

Failure to cross "t"

Fact that sheriff in return of service of citation failed to cross "t" in defendant's name was held not to render service defective.—Boothe v. American State Bank of Amarillo, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 250.

Recital in return as to delivery of copies in case of service on multiple defendants see supra § 94.

Certified copy

Summons would not be quashed or service thereof set aside on ground that copy delivered to defendants was not certified, even if summons must be certified, where return followed exactly wording of statute and meant that both summons and complaint were certified.—Johnson v. Demmert Packing Co., 8 Alaska 452.

as the case may be, a return of service so made must affirmatively show that everything required by the statute was strictly performed in the manner required by the statute,<sup>90</sup> including the fact that the place at which the copy was left was a place of the character designated by statute,<sup>91</sup> and that the person with whom it was left was one of the class specified therein.<sup>92</sup> In some jurisdictions the name of the person with whom the process was left must be stated in the return,<sup>93</sup> but in others such showing has been held unnecessary.<sup>94</sup>

Service on agent. Where service is made on a person as agent of defendant, the return should show that he is such agent,<sup>95</sup> and should show a compliance with the statutes prescribing the requirements for such service.<sup>96</sup>

50 C.J. p 568 note 82.

"Leaving" or "posting" copy

Return stating that summons was executed by "leaving" copy posted at defendant's front door complied with statute authorizing substituted service by "posting" copy of summons at defendant's front door.—Haller v. Digman, 167 S.E. 593, 113 W.Va. 240.

Notice of nature and pendency of action

The report of a warning order attorney for absent nonresident defendant should have stated that attorney advised defendant of nature and pendency of action.—Bell v. Bell, 152 S.W.2d 263, 287 Ky. 7.

Service on secretary of state

(1) The sheriff's return of service on a nonresident should state that a return receipt was requested on the copies of the complaints sent by registered mail, that the copy mailed to the secretary of the Commonwealth was accompanied by the fee provided by law, and that the copy mailed to defendant contained an endorsement thereon showing that service was made upon the secretary of the Commonwealth.—Hinkel v. Beiting, 69 Pa.Dist. & Co. 129.

(2) Under a statute providing for service of process on the secretary of state in certain cases, and the giving of notice of such service by registered mail, and the filing of defendant's return receipt before the entry of judgment, plaintiff was held not required to disclose the return receipt card and the copy of the registered letter before the trial of the action.—Eastman v. Benton, 167 So. 169, 184 La. 620.

91. Ill.—Werner v. W. H. Shons Co., 173 N.E. 486, 341 Ill. 478.

"Residence"

Where the statutes require substituted service to be made at defendant's dwelling house or place of abode, a return showing that a copy of the summons was left at defendant's "residence" is insufficient, since a residence may be a place where one does not dwell or abide.—F. E. Compton & Co. v. Hulse, 159 A. 806, 10 N.J.Misc. 486—50 C.J. p 568 note 83 [c] (8).

50 C.J. p 569 note 84.

"Person" or "member" of family

Words "person of the family," as used in statute providing for service of summons, and words "member of the family" as used in return on summons, were held identical in meaning.—Sullivan v. Walburn, 154 A. 617, 9 N.J.Misc. 280—50 C.J. p 569 note 84 [d].

Service on "maid"

While a return reciting merely that service had been made on defendant's "maid" at his dwelling house would not be self-supporting, if it also alleges that she was an "adult member of the family," it is sufficient.—Waber v. Schaffhauser, 34 Pa.Dist. & Co. 348.

93. Wis.—Lewis v. Hartel, 24 Wis. 504.

50 C.J. p 569 note 85.

§ 96. — Process Not Served

A return of process not served should show the reason for the failure to make service, as that defendant is dead, or could not be found, or is exempt from service, or that the officer was prevented by force of arms from making service.

A return of process not served should show the facts from which the failure to make service resulted, as that defendant is dead,<sup>97</sup> or could not be found in the county,<sup>98</sup> or is exempt from service,<sup>99</sup> or refused to receive a copy of the process when offered,<sup>1</sup> or that the officer was kept off by force of arms.<sup>2</sup>

Not found. A return of non est inventus is ordinarily sufficient to show that defendant could not be found within the county of the officer making the return;<sup>3</sup> but a return of not found within

Return non est inventus showing on its face that residence of defendant was unknown to officer was evidence on which action for breach of contract was properly entered and continued for notice.—Therrien v. Scammon, 176 A. 116, 87 N.H. 214.

the bailiwick of the officer is not sufficient where his bailiwick is or may be smaller than the county.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, a return that defendant cannot be found within the state is ineffective, since the officer cannot officially know the inhabitants of the state,<sup>5</sup> although such a return may be good as to the territory of which he can take official notice.<sup>6</sup> A return of not found is improper where defendant is a known inhabitant of another county or state.<sup>7</sup> Where it shows that the officer failed to go to the dwelling house of defendant, a return of not found is ordinarily nugatory,<sup>8</sup> but a return that defendant has no last or usual place of abode within the county is sufficient.<sup>9</sup> Where provision is made by statute for substituted service, a return of non est inventus is insufficient without a showing that defendant could not be served within the county.<sup>10</sup> Under statutes authorizing judgment to be taken against less than all of joint defendants only when the other or others are not residents or inhabitants of the county, a return merely that such others were not found is insufficient to sustain such a judgment.<sup>11</sup>

Nihil habet. A return of nihil habet may be proper where service cannot be made,<sup>12</sup> although non est inventus is more usual.<sup>13</sup> The former is a fuller answer to the command of the writ than the latter,<sup>14</sup> and so may be sufficient where a return of not found would be sufficient,<sup>15</sup> as where substituted service could be had, although defendant was not found in person.<sup>16</sup>

Mortuus est. When the officer to whom process has been given for service knows that defendant is dead, the proper return is mortuus est,<sup>17</sup> and not nihil habet.<sup>18</sup>

§ 97. — Construction to Determine Sufficiency

A return of process should receive a reasonable construction and, if susceptible of different meanings, should be given that meaning which will most nearly conform to the legal duty of the officer.

A return of process should receive a fair, reasonable, and natural construction;<sup>19</sup> and effect must be given to its plain intent and meaning.<sup>20</sup> In determining whether or not a return of process is sufficient on its face, no nice criticisms will be indulged in respect of the words used, and, if it can be fairly inferred from the language employed that the officer has met the requirements of the law, the return will be deemed sufficient.<sup>21</sup> The return should receive every reasonable intendment,<sup>22</sup> and, if it is susceptible of different meanings, the meaning will be adopted which is most conformable to the legal duty of the officer.<sup>23</sup> Where it is obvious from the words used and the general tenor and context that certain words or their substance have been omitted, such words may be supplied by construction.<sup>24</sup> Redundant or surplus matter will be disregarded.<sup>25</sup>

Residence and evasion of process

Sheriff's return that after diligent search and inquiry defendant was not to be found in a named county was a representation to the court that defendant was a resident of such county and was evading process.—Willshire v. Frees, 201 S.W.2d 675, 184 Tenn. 523.

Absence of service on defendant

"Served"

The indorsement on process as having been "served" implies service as by law required.—State v. Moore, 55 S.E.2d 177, 230 N.C. 648.

24. Mo.—Carter v. Flynn, 112 S.W. 2d 364, 232 Mo.App. 771.

25. Ill.—Brignall v. Merkle, 28 N.E. 2d 311, 306 Ill.App. 137.

The whole of the return must be considered together in determining its effect,<sup>26</sup> and it cannot be separated or divided into parts.<sup>27</sup> Where two returns are indorsed on a process, both will be construed together.<sup>28</sup>

Service in individual or representative capacity. A return showing service on a designated person without further description is ordinarily insufficient to show that he was served in a representative capacity.<sup>29</sup> Where one is sued in both his individual and a representative capacity, a return stating merely that personal service was made is equivocal,<sup>30</sup> and is not conclusive that he was served in his individual capacity only and not in his representative capacity.<sup>31</sup>

§ 98. Presumptions

- a. In general
- b. Person served

a. In General

There is a general presumption in favor of the truth and correctness of a return which is regular on its face; and particular presumptions may also be indulged with respect to the competency of the person making service, due diligence, and the time, place, and manner of service.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary, the truth and correctness of a return of process which is regular on its face are strongly<sup>32</sup> presumed.<sup>33</sup> Where it appears that a copy of the complaint and summons was mailed, and that the complaint was received, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the summons inclosed therewith was also received.<sup>34</sup>

On the other hand, it has been held that no inference or presumption will be indulged to aid an insufficient return of citation or process,<sup>35</sup> and that the fact of service cannot be presumed where it does not appear on the face of a return of process.<sup>36</sup> The presumption of truth and correctness has no application where a mistake in the return is conceded.<sup>37</sup> Moreover, there is some authority to the broad effect that nothing can be presumed in favor of the return or read into it by intendment.<sup>38</sup> No presumption of service has been held to arise from the mere recitation of service in a default judgment.<sup>39</sup> The presumption of a return arising from a judgment is overcome by proof that there actually was no return made.<sup>40</sup> It has been intimated that the presumption in favor of a sheriff's return does not arise where the return is made by a special bailiff.<sup>41</sup>

Record showing void service or defective process

Where remainder of record positively shows void service of process, recital in judgment as to proper service does not give rise, in a collateral proceeding, to a presumption of another service, but it is presumed that service found in record is the same and only service referred to in judgment; and same rule applies to defective process.—Town of Brighton v. 41. Ky.—Gardner v. Lincoln Bank

Performance of officer's duty. A general presumption is ordinarily indulged, in aid of an officer's return of process which is regular on its face, that the officer by whom it is made has done his duty in the premises,<sup>42</sup> unless the contrary appears.<sup>43</sup>

Competency of person making service. In aid of a return of process, it will ordinarily be presumed that the person by whom service was shown to have been made was competent to make it.<sup>44</sup> Thus, one who makes a return as an officer will be presumed to be duly qualified as such and authorized to serve the process in question,<sup>45</sup> and to be an officer of the proper court<sup>46</sup> and county;<sup>47</sup> one who purports to serve process as a deputy will be presumed to have been duly authorized as such;<sup>48</sup> where the service was made by a coroner, it will be presumed that the conditions existed which made service by him proper;<sup>49</sup> and where a previous grant of authority is necessary in order that one other than an officer may serve process, such grant will be presumed in order to support such service.<sup>50</sup>

Due diligence. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that an officer returning process not served or making a return of substituted service exercised due diligence to execute the process and serve defendant personally.<sup>51</sup>

Time of service and return. Where a return of service of process is without date, or the date is imperfectly or uncertainly stated, it will be presumed that the process was served within the time prescribed by law,<sup>52</sup> and that the return was made at the proper time.<sup>53</sup> Where the officer is in possession of two notices, and his duty is to serve both immediately, there is no presumption or inference as to which was first served;<sup>54</sup> and, where an affidavit for service by publication was filed the same day that the summons and complaint were served, there is no presumption that the summons was served either before or after the filing of the affidavit.<sup>55</sup>

Place of service. Where a return of service of process fails to state where the service was made, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, to have been made within the territorial limits of the officer's authority,<sup>56</sup> except in a suit on a foreign judgment, in which case no such presumption will be indulged as to the service of the process on which the judgment was founded.<sup>57</sup> Similarly, where substituted service is shown, it will be presumed, unless the contrary appears, that the place where a copy of the process is stated to have been left was of the kind designated by the statute providing for such service.<sup>58</sup>

Manner of service. While it has been held that no presumptions will supply an omission of a return of service of process to set forth the doing of all acts necessary to constitute a valid service,<sup>59</sup> the more general rule appears to be that, where a return recites execution of the process, it will be presumed that it was executed in the manner provided by law;<sup>60</sup> and where a statute provides what the return shall show, it will be presumed, as to all facts not required to appear therein, that all legal requirements were observed.<sup>61</sup>

Sufficiency of copy delivered. Where a return of service of process recites the delivery to the person served of a copy of the process or a pleading, it will be presumed that a true copy was delivered,<sup>62</sup> and that such copy bore the indorsements required by statute;<sup>63</sup> and when a certified copy is stated to have been delivered, the certification will be presumed to have been made by the proper officer.<sup>64</sup>

Residence of defendant. Where a return regular on its face recites personal service of process, it will be presumed that defendant was a resident of the county wherein the service is shown to have been made, when such residence is essential to the validity of the service,<sup>65</sup> unless the fact of nonresidence appears;<sup>66</sup> and where the return shows substituted service, under a statute providing for such service on persons who are nonresidents of the county but residents of the state, it will be presumed that defendant was a resident of the state.<sup>67</sup> When process is issued to, and served in, another county there is no presumption that defendant resides in the county in which the action is pending.<sup>68</sup> The presumption that defendant's residence was such as to give the court jurisdiction of his person has no application, where the return does not show the existence of any condition required by statute to authorize service of process in the mode in which it was made.<sup>69</sup>

Corrections or alterations of return. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a correction or alteration of a return will be presumed to have been made before the return left the hands of the officer.<sup>70</sup>

b. Person Served

Where a return regular on its face recites service of process on a designated person, a presumption arises that service was made on the person named therein.

Where a return regular on its face recites service of process on a designated person, it will be presumed, until the contrary appears, that service was made on the person named therein,<sup>71</sup> and that such person was the proper person on whom to make the service;<sup>72</sup> and where service on an infant defendant is shown, it will be presumed that he was of such age that service could be made on him personally rather than on his parent or guardian.<sup>73</sup> Where, however, a return of process directed to two or more defendants recites service by delivering a copy to "the within-named defendant," no inference can be indulged as to the identity of the person served.<sup>74</sup>

Service on agent. Where a return of substituted service recites that the process was served on an agent of defendant, it will ordinarily be presumed that the person served was defendant's agent;<sup>75</sup> and, although the return omits to set forth the character of the agent, it will be presumed that he was an agent permitted to be served on behalf of his principal by statutes restricting the class or character of agents on whom service may be made.<sup>76</sup>

§ 99. Operation and Effect in General

A proper return of process by an officer authorized to make it is strong or at least prima facie evidence of the facts recited therein, provided the matters set forth constitute an appropriate subject of the return.

A return of process made in due form by an officer authorized to make it, and in a proceeding wherein it is requisite and proper, is strong or at least prima facie evidence of the facts which the officer is authorized and required to show by his return,<sup>77</sup> and is ordinarily the only competent proof

Where means are available for defendant to secure service of copy of summons when left with a member of the family, court will presume that it was brought to defendant's attention, but not so when it is conclusively shown that it could not have been done.—Clark v. Clark, 30 So.2d 170, 158 Fla. 731.

thereof,<sup>78</sup> except in the case of acceptance or acknowledgment of service, as discussed supra § 38, since parol evidence is not receivable to establish the fact.<sup>79</sup> The return, it has been said, imports verity.<sup>80</sup> However, it has also been asserted that where the statute does not make the officer's return conclusive or the only evidence of the manner of executing process, there is no reason why the facts may not be shown by other competent evidence, provided it is not attempted to contradict the return.<sup>81</sup> A return does not lose its force as such evidence by lapse of time,<sup>82</sup> and, therefore, may be used again as evidence of service where a judgment founded on it has been vacated.<sup>83</sup>

The return is not evidence of nonessential matters stated by it,<sup>84</sup> or matters not properly the subject of the return,<sup>85</sup> or matters over which the authority of the officer does not extend.<sup>86</sup> While it is prima facie evidence even of matters of which the officer had no personal knowledge, where they are proper to be stated in the return,<sup>87</sup> statements made without direct knowledge of any kind on the part of the officer have no greater weight than similar statements of other witnesses based on like foundations.<sup>88</sup> The return cannot fix the capacity in which defendant is sued,<sup>89</sup> or give to the place where service was made a character which in fact it does not possess.<sup>90</sup> It has no effect as evidence when it shows that the service was made outside the territorial limits within which the officer has jurisdiction to make service in his official capacity.<sup>91</sup> A return showing defective service does not divest jurisdiction actually acquired by proper service.<sup>92</sup>

An unauthorized return is not evidence of the facts stated therein, except as any other private memorandum may be used as evidence.<sup>93</sup>

(2) Statements in return of service that documents were left at defendant's usual place of residence with a member of his family were conclusions of fact and not evidence.—Zazove v. Wilson, 80 N.E.2d 101, 334 Ill.App. 594.

ly renders it functus officio, and no subsequent service of the same process will be effectual for any purpose.<sup>94</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, the summons is not a writ issuing from a court and the return of the summons to the court does not render it functus officio.<sup>95</sup> When the return relates to less than the whole number of defendants, the court may permit the process to be withdrawn for further service on the others.<sup>96</sup>

§ 100. Conclusiveness

There is a conflict of authority on the question of the conclusiveness of a return of process, some authorities holding that it is conclusive between the parties as to all matters of which the return is evidence, whereas other authorities hold that it may be rebutted or impeached.

The question of the conclusiveness of a return of process, as to parties to the action and their privies, is one on which there has been said to be an irreconcilable conflict of authority.<sup>97</sup> It is the rule of the English common law<sup>98</sup> and of some American jurisdictions<sup>99</sup> that, as between parties to an action and those in privity with them, a return of process which is regular on its face ordinarily is conclusive as to all matters of which the return is evidence, so that as to such matters it can be controverted only in an action against the officer<sup>1</sup> for a false return,<sup>2</sup> unless the return is con-

In Pennsylvania

(1) In the absence of fraud, a sheriff's return which is full and complete on its face ordinarily is conclusive and cannot be set aside on extrinsic evidence.—Morris v. Mehalshuck, Com.Pl., 10 Sch.Reg. 1, 57 York Leg.Rec. 187—50 C.J. p 574 note 96 [b] (1).

(2) A constable's return is similarly conclusive.—Polis v. Raphael, 52 A.2d 355, 160 Pa.Super. 544—Ristau, for Use of Ristau, v. Crew Levick Co., 167 A. 800, 109 Pa.Super. 357—Wood v. Conaboy, 14 Pa.Dist. & Co. 102—Reading Bone Fertilizer Co. v. Lehman, Com.Pl., 59 Dauph.Co. 192—50 C.J. p 574 note 96 [c].

(3) Return of sheriff on service of summons in suit against fraternal beneficial society brought in county other than that in which society had its principal office was held conclusive that society had no office or place of business in county in which suit was brought.—Kolesar v. Slovak Evangelical Union, Augsburg Confession of America, 186 A. 302, 122 Pa.Super. 318.

(4) Sheriff's return of service of summons which is defective on its face may be set aside.—Rittenberg v. Stein, 97 Pa.Super. 554—50 C.J. p 574 note 96 [b] (2).

(5) A sheriff's return is not conclusive where a nonresident is involved.—Hagen Corporation v. Empire Sheet and Tin Plate Co., 11 A.2d 144, 337 Pa. 232—Vaughn v. Love, 188 A. 299, 324 Pa. 276, 107 A.L.R. 1336—Hinkel v. Beiting, 69 Pa.Dist. & Co. 129—Snyder v. McCanless, 23 Pa.Dist. & Co. 551—National Paper Corp. v. Scheck, Com.Pl., 47 Lack.Jur. 139—Proctor v. Bourne, Com.Pl., 59 Mont.Co. 245.

(6) Since anyone may serve a statement of claim, the return of service is not conclusive on the parties even if made by the sheriff.—Coleman Dining Car Co. v. Walsh, 48 Pa.Dist. & Co. 283, 44 Lack.Jur. 255, 11 Som.Leg.J. 369, 57 York Leg. Rec. 196.

1. Ky.—Foster v. Hill, 138 S.W.2d 495, 282 Ky. 327—Commonwealth Life Ins. Co. v. Combs, 65 S.W.2d 696, 251 Ky. 540.

Statute applicable only to certificate
Statute providing that no fact officially stated by an officer regarding a matter about which officer is required by law to make a statement in writing, shall be called in question, except on allegation of fraud in party benefited thereby or mistake by the officer unless in a direct proceeding against officer or his surety, applied only to a certificate actually signed by the officer and not to a forged paper which is a nullity.—Park Hill Realty Co. v. Lykins, 161 S.W.2d 602, 290 Ky. 498.

2. Mo.—State ex rel. Frazier v. Green, App., 143 S.W.2d 64—White v. Hal-John Realty & Investment Co., 43 S.W.2d 855, 226 Mo.App. 157—Deichmann v. Hogan, App., 26 S.W.2d 874.

tradicted by other matters appearing of record in the case,<sup>3</sup> or unless the falsity of the return was the result of fraud or collusion on the part of plaintiff or was known to him,<sup>4</sup> or resulted from the mistake of the officer,<sup>5</sup> except where the return forms the basis for a foreign judgment, in which case it is prima facie evidence only.<sup>6</sup> In a number of jurisdictions the more liberal rule prevails that, while a return of process is strong or at least prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, as discussed supra § 99, it is not conclusive, even as to parties and their privies, but may be rebutted or impeached,<sup>7</sup> unless, it has been said, the rights of third persons have intervened.<sup>8</sup>

In the absence of fraud or mistake, the return of an officer may not ordinarily be attacked in a collateral proceeding between parties or privies.<sup>9</sup> On the other hand, in jurisdictions where the strict common-law rule does not prevail, the return is not conclusive on direct attack.<sup>10</sup> Even in jurisdictions where the return is ordinarily conclusive, it is nevertheless not conclusive as to matters which cannot be supposed to have been within the officer's own knowledge,<sup>11</sup> such as defendant's residence or place of abode,<sup>12</sup> or as to collateral matters<sup>13</sup> or conclusions of fact or law;<sup>14</sup> and it has been held that the rule making the return conclusive becomes applicable only where proper process has issued and been returned to court as the law requires.<sup>15</sup> It has also been held that the return is conclusive only for the purpose of establishing jurisdiction,<sup>16</sup> and is not conclusive of the legality of the officer's action.<sup>17</sup> Furthermore, it may be shown that the person by whom service was made was not the officer he designates himself.<sup>18</sup>

Some authorities, in considering an officer's return, draw a distinction between cases of judgment on no notice, actual, presumptive, or constructive, and cases where there has been actual notice but a technicality is relied on to defeat it, or where defendant appeared and denied service but had opportunity to defend; and they hold that in the former instances the return may be impeached,<sup>19</sup> whereas in the latter instances it may not.<sup>20</sup> As sometimes stated, the verity of a return may be attacked only where the affected party had no notice of the pendency of the suit.<sup>21</sup>

questioned otherwise than in a direct proceeding against him for a false return,<sup>22</sup> at least when the party against whom it is sought to be impeached derives some interest from or under it.<sup>23</sup> It is not conclusive in the officer's favor,<sup>24</sup> although it has been held to be prima facie evidence for him of the fact of service.<sup>25</sup>

As to strangers to the record. A return of process does not conclude strangers to the record, but as to them is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, and so may be impeached by extrinsic proof.<sup>26</sup>

§ 101. Aiding or Explaining Return

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove material facts concerning the service of process in addition to, and not inconsistent with, those shown by a valid and sufficient return.

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove material facts, concerning the execution of process, in addition to, and not inconsistent with, those shown by a valid and sufficient return thereof.<sup>27</sup> Defects or omissions in a return, however, cannot be corrected or supplied by such evidence, according to some authorities,<sup>28</sup> even after the death of the officer

Official acts required to be set forth

The rule that a party may not aver falsity of return made by proper officer except in a direct proceeding against officer applies only to such facts as officer is required by law to set forth in return, and only when facts stated are official acts done in usual course of proceedings.—U. S. Gypsum Co. v. Moore, 37 N.E.2d 682, 110 Ind.App. 47.

Ignorance of suit

The return does not preclude a party from showing that he was ignorant that the suit was pending and so had no opportunity to present his defense in court.—C. & D. Building Corporation v. Griffithes, 157 A. 137, 109 N.J.Eq. 319.

Availability of defense

As long as the return of a sheriff is permitted to remain unamended, it must be taken as true and is not to be contradicted by the parties, unless it comes within the influence of the rule that a defendant, against whom a judgment has been obtained without service of process or notice, may apply to a proper court for relief, provided he has a defense to the action, which for want of notice he was not permitted to make.—Jaffe v. ### Automobile license showing residence Defendant's affidavit filed with motor vehicle department as basis for issue of automobile owner's license showing his residence to be located at place where service was made was held evidential against him.—Blair v. Vetrano, 172 A. 604, 12 N.J. Misc. 462.

by whom the return was made;<sup>29</sup> but under a more liberal rule it is held that omissions in a return may be supplied or ambiguities explained by parol evidence,<sup>30</sup> as where the return is so indefinite and uncertain as to render its meaning doubtful.<sup>31</sup> Such evidence does not constitute a contradiction of, or attack on, the return,<sup>32</sup> and, accordingly, fraud or mistake in the return need not be shown, even in those jurisdictions in which the strict common-law rule as to the conclusiveness of a return obtains, before such evidence may be admitted.<sup>33</sup>

Lost return. Where a return of process has been lost, parol evidence is admissible to show the execution of the process;<sup>34</sup> and in some jurisdictions, under statutes so providing, an entry or notation on the docket of the court is evidence in such case that the process was executed as thereby shown.<sup>35</sup>

§ 102. Impeachment or Contradiction of Return

- a. In general
- b. Evidence required

a. In General

In so far as a return is not considered conclusive, extrinsic evidence is admissible to contradict its recitals, the burden of proof being on the one seeking to contradict the return to negative its statements.

As to matters with respect to which a return of process is not conclusive, or in jurisdictions in which it is not regarded as such, extrinsic evidence is admissible to contradict its statements and recitals,<sup>36</sup> subject to the ordinary considerations of relevancy and materiality.<sup>37</sup> Parol evidence is competent for such purpose,<sup>38</sup> and the return may be attacked by the oral testimony of defendant.<sup>39</sup> It has been held that testimony of the officer by whom the return was made<sup>40</sup> or a record kept in his office<sup>41</sup> is not admissible; but it has also been held that, where the testimony of the officer fully corroborates other testimony showing falsity of the return and lack of reasonable diligence to find the proper individual for service of process, all the evidence should be considered.<sup>42</sup> Where other documents accompany the return, it may be contradicted by them.<sup>43</sup>

Burden of proof. In general, the burden of proof is on one seeking to contradict a return of service to negative its statements or recitals or show that the process was not served.<sup>44</sup> However, it has been held that the burden of sustaining the

Place of abode

The burden of proof to sustain allegation that defendant had no usual place of abode in county of venue when deputy sheriff posted copy of summons on front door of house wherein defendant formerly lived in such county was on defendant.—Crouch v. Crouch, 20 S.E.2d 169, 124 W.Va. 331.

Diligence

Person asserting falsity in return of officer making substituted service must show lack of diligence to make validity of a special statutory process rests on him who asserts it,<sup>45</sup> and that, where substituted service is attacked in limine, the burden is on plaintiff to sustain it.<sup>46</sup>

b. Evidence Required

Clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence is required to negative a return and overcome its recitals, and the unsupported denial of the party alleged to have been served is generally considered insufficient for this purpose.

Clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence is required to negative a return of process and overcome its statements and recitals;<sup>47</sup> and a mere pre-

Weight to be given testimony

In suit attacking validity of a default judgment against plaintiff on ground that summons was never served, plaintiff's testimony was of but little weight but testimony of deputy sheriff that summons was executed by deputy's brother by delivering a copy to plaintiff's wife was entitled to considerable weight.—Newsome v. ponderance of the evidence in favor of one contradicting a return is ordinarily insufficient.<sup>48</sup> The return can be set aside only on evidence which is the strongest that the nature of the case will admit.<sup>49</sup> Proof beyond a doubt, however, is not necessary.<sup>50</sup>

While there is some authority to the effect that the testimony of defendant alone may be sufficient to overcome the presumption in favor of the officer's return,<sup>51</sup> generally the rule is laid down that a return of process cannot be impeached by the unsupported testimony of defendant, or the party served, or the party on whom service is stated by the officer to have been made,<sup>52</sup> or of another single witness,<sup>53</sup> even though the officer fails to recall the service,<sup>54</sup> and that the testimony of other defendants that they were not served is not effective or sufficient.<sup>55</sup> However, a return may be overcome by the testimony of only one witness where his evidence is strongly corroborated.<sup>56</sup> A denial of service by a defendant or witness, in order to overcome the return of process, must be strongly and substantially<sup>57</sup> corroborated.<sup>58</sup> The corroborating evidence need not be direct and may be wholly circumstantial,<sup>59</sup> but it must come from a source other than that of the one witness who is attacking the service.<sup>60</sup> An officer's return of service of process should not be impeached solely by his own testimony.<sup>61</sup>

Place of service

"Sworn return"

Expression "sworn return" as used in rule that uncorroborated parol testimony of judgment debtor is insufficient to overcome officer's sworn return as to personal service means return made by officer who is sworn in accordance with law to perform his duties.—Canard v. #### "Strongly corroborated"

Under the rule that the testimony of one witness cannot impeach a return of citation unless "strongly corroborated," the quoted words mean a degree of corroboration amounting to corroboration from independent facts and circumstances which is "clear and satisfactory" to the court and jury, which means independent facts and circumstances which are, in opinion of court and jury, "strong," that is, cogent, powerful, forcible, calculated to make a deep or effectual impression on the mind.—Wright v. ## § 103. Affidavit of Service

- b. Form and requisites
- c. Weight, sufficiency, and conclusiveness

a. In General

Service of process by one other than an officer authorized to make proof of service by his official return must generally be established by an affidavit or statement under oath of the process server.

A statement of a person by whom process has been served, other than an officer authorized to make proof of service by his official return, as to the fact and manner of service, for the purpose of proving the same, may be made only in the form of an affidavit or under the oath of such person.<sup>62</sup> This rule applies to officers not empowered by statute to make proof of service by their return, such as constables,<sup>63</sup> city marshals,<sup>64</sup> special officers and deputies,<sup>65</sup> and officers of a state other than that in which the action is brought or pending.<sup>66</sup> Furthermore, when any officer makes service as an individual and not in his official capacity, the proof of service must be made by affidavit rather than by return.<sup>67</sup>

Affidavit of third person. Service may be proved by the affidavit of a person other than the one who made the service, where his statement is made on personal knowledge and not on hearsay,<sup>68</sup> but one who could not himself legally have served the process cannot be permitted by his affidavit to prove service by another.<sup>69</sup>

b. Form and Requisites

An affidavit of service should show a compliance with statutory requisites, as for example, with respect to statements as to the person served and the time and place of service.

An affidavit of service must show a compliance with all the statutory requisites.<sup>70</sup> Under statutes so requiring, the affidavit must state that the person served is, or that affiant knows him to be, the identical person named in the process,<sup>71</sup> and it is not sufficient to show that the person served acknowledged himself to be the person so named;<sup>72</sup> but in the absence of statutory provision therefor such a statement is unnecessary,<sup>73</sup> and a rule of court requiring it has been held invalid as inconsistent with statutes relating to proof of service which are silent as to any such additional statement.<sup>74</sup> It is also sometimes required that the affidavit show the time<sup>75</sup> and place<sup>76</sup> of service, and, even in the absence of statute, it has been held that the place should be shown when service is made outside the state in which the action is brought or pending.<sup>77</sup> In addition, in some jurisdictions, it must appear from the affidavit that the person by whom service was made possessed the qualifications prescribed by statute, as that he was of the proper age,<sup>78</sup> that he is competent to testify as a witness at the trial of the cause,<sup>79</sup> that he is not a party to the action<sup>80</sup> or is not interested in the matter in controversy.<sup>81</sup> It has been held that the affidavit of service need not set forth the date on which the affidavit was made.<sup>82</sup>

A return of service in the ordinary form, not reciting that it is made under oath, but to which a proper jurat has been subjoined, is a sufficient affidavit of service.<sup>83</sup> While the signature of affiant in the affidavit of service should, according to good form, precede the jurat,<sup>84</sup> the fact that it comes after the jurat has been held not to affect the validity of the affidavit.<sup>85</sup>

Plural affidavits. All the requisite facts need not appear in one affidavit, but may be shown by two or more affidavits, considered together.<sup>86</sup>

Before whom made. Where a statute provides that an affidavit of service shall be made before a designated officer, an affidavit sworn before any other officer is fatally defective;<sup>87</sup> and, under this rule, affidavits made before a deputy of the officer designated by statute have been held to be insufficient.<sup>88</sup> In the absence of any express provision or restriction, however, the affidavit may be made before any officer authorized to administer oaths.<sup>89</sup>

c. Weight, Sufficiency, and Conclusiveness

An affidavit of service is ordinarily sufficient proof of service, although it is not conclusive and may be controverted by evidence.

An affidavit of service of process is ordinarily sufficient proof thereof,<sup>90</sup> and will override allegations to the contrary made merely on information and belief.<sup>91</sup> An affidavit of service by a private person is not conclusive,<sup>92</sup> but on direct attack it may be shown to be false<sup>93</sup> and the facts therein stated may be controverted by evidence,<sup>94</sup> even after judgment has been entered.<sup>95</sup> Clear and con-

§ 104. Proof of Publication

- a. In general
- b. Form and requisites of affidavit or certificate
- c. Compliance with concurrent requirements

a. In General

Service of process by publication is generally proved by an affidavit or certificate of the publisher or other person designated by statute.

Proof of service of process by publication in a newspaper is ordinarily required or permitted by statute to be made by the affidavit or certificate of the publisher of such newspaper or by some other designated person; and the giving of the required affidavit or certificate may be compelled in case of refusal.<sup>97</sup> According to some authorities, the service of process by publication may be proved only by an affidavit or certificate made by the person designated by statute, and no other evidence may be received in substitution therefor.<sup>98</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, such method is not exclusive, and the fact and manner of publication may be shown, or defects or omissions in an affidavit or certificate cured, by any other competent evidence,<sup>99</sup> including, according to the decisions on

Mailing of petition and notice

Compliance with a statute requiring that, in the case of service by publication, a copy of the petition with a copy of the publication notice should be mailed to defendant may be shown either by the filing of an

the question, parol testimony<sup>1</sup> or the affidavit of some other person who knows the facts,<sup>2</sup> On collateral attack, where it appears either that proof of service by publication was not made or that it cannot be produced, such proof may be supplied by evidence aliunde.<sup>3</sup>

Time for making. The time at which an affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication shall be made is prescribed by statute in some jurisdictions; but such a provision has been held to be directory only,<sup>4</sup> and proof of the publication may be supplied even after judgment.<sup>5</sup> An affidavit or certificate of service by publication which is made before the end of the period for which such publication is required to be made is ineffectual.<sup>6</sup>

By whom made. An affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication, in order to be valid and sufficient, must be made by the particular person, if any, designated by the statute for such method of proof,<sup>7</sup> such as the publisher of the newspaper in which publication has been made,<sup>8</sup> or the printer or his foreman or principal clerk;<sup>9</sup> and it cannot validly be made for him by proxy.<sup>10</sup>

Weight and sufficiency. An affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication, regular on its face, is ordinarily prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.<sup>11</sup> Its weight may be overcome, however, by positive evidence of its falsity.<sup>12</sup>

b. Form and Requisites of Affidavit or Certificate

An affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication should be made in such form as may be prescribed by statute, and, in general, should show that publication was made at the proper time and in the proper manner.

An affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication should be made in such form as may be prescribed or required by statute.<sup>13</sup> It has been held that jurisdiction of the parties is acquired by proper publication, and not by the proof thereof,<sup>14</sup> and that a judgment will not be set aside merely because the proof is deficient, where it appears that service was in fact properly had;<sup>15</sup> but there is authority for the view that proof of publication is an element of the jurisdiction, and, accordingly, that a want of proof is fatal.<sup>16</sup>

An unsigned certificate ordinarily is ineffectual;<sup>17</sup> and where an affidavit is required, an unsworn certificate is insufficient.<sup>18</sup> However, where a deputy clerk made oath to an affidavit before a competent attesting officer that a copy of the process was mailed to defendant, such affidavit, although unsigned, was held to constitute proof that a copy of the summons was mailed to defendant.<sup>19</sup> Where a printed copy of the process published is required to be returned with the affidavit or certificate, failure to attach such copy renders the proof defective.<sup>20</sup> Misstatements in the affidavit or certificate as to immaterial facts will not render it void;<sup>21</sup> and the omission of an essential or material fact may be supplied by a second affidavit or certificate.<sup>22</sup>

22. Cal.—Howard v. McChesney, 37 P. 523, 103 Cal. 536.

affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication may be made only by such person as may be designated by statute, it should affirmatively show that the affiant or maker is the person or one of the class of persons so designated,<sup>23</sup> and a mere description or recital of his character as such has been held insufficient,<sup>24</sup> although there is authority to the contrary.<sup>25</sup> He need not, however, designate himself by the terms or words used in the statute, if he states facts showing that he comes within its purview.<sup>26</sup>

Time and manner of publication. Broadly speaking, an affidavit or certificate of service of process by publication should show that such publication as is required by statute has been made in the manner thereby prescribed,<sup>27</sup> and ordinarily no presumption will be indulged in aid of it.<sup>28</sup> It should appear that publication was made in a newspaper,<sup>29</sup> naming it,<sup>30</sup> of the kind specified by the statute,<sup>31</sup> and that it was the same newspaper in which publication was ordered to be made.<sup>32</sup> The affidavit or certificate should also show that publication was made at the proper time, for the requisite number of times, at the proper intervals, and for the required period,<sup>33</sup> and in the proper county and state,<sup>34</sup> as provided by statute or order of court. In some jurisdictions the dates of the issues of the paper in which the notice was published must be shown.<sup>35</sup> Where an affidavit or certificate states that the process was published for a certain length of time or on certain days, but sets forth dates which show that it was not so published or that publication was made for a different time or on other days, the showing made by the dates will control,<sup>36</sup> unless there is an obvious clerical error in the dates,<sup>37</sup> or unless they are stated merely under a videlicet.<sup>38</sup>

Proof of service of process by publication should show a compliance with concurrent requirements, such as posting copies of the process or publication, or mailing copies to the defendant.

Where statutes providing for constructive service of process require other acts to be done in addition to publication in a newspaper, such as posting copies of the process or publication, or mailing copies to defendants served by publication, compliance with such requirements should be shown by affidavit or by the certificate of an authorized officer,<sup>39</sup> and, under some statutes, such affidavit or certificate is jurisdictional;<sup>40</sup> but where it is not, by statute, made exclusive evidence of the doing of the acts required, the fact of compliance may be shown by parol in a proper case.<sup>41</sup>

By whom made. An affidavit of compliance with such concurrent requirements should ordinarily be made by the person by whom the acts were done;<sup>42</sup> and, if plaintiff's attorney has performed such acts, he may prove performance by his own affidavit.<sup>43</sup>

Dates of first and last publication

Where affidavit of publisher recited that first publication of summons was on Sept. 18, 1942 and last thereof on Oct. 16, 1942, but at bottom of advertisement as printed and continuously published appeared statement "First Publication: Sept. 18, 1942, Last Publication Oct. 18, 1942" and without the inclusion of dates of publication, notice as published would have been vulnerable to charge of indefiniteness, the statement setting forth the dates of first and last publication constituted an essential part of summons as published.—Netland v. Requisites and sufficiency. An affidavit or certificate of mailing a copy should show such facts as to time<sup>44</sup> and place<sup>45</sup> of mailing, and direction or address,<sup>46</sup> as may be necessary under the statute; but receipt of the copy by the person to whom it was mailed need not be shown,<sup>47</sup> since, ordinarily, it is presumed that it was delivered where it is not returned and no notice of nondelivery is given by the postal authorities.<sup>48</sup> Evidence that the copy was not received is no proof, or at most only slight proof, that it was not mailed,<sup>49</sup> and will not prevail over positive evidence of mailing.<sup>50</sup>

§ 105. Filing Return or Proof

In general, there should be compliance with statutes requiring the filing of a return, affidavit, or other proof of execution of process so that the time and manner of service may be shown by the record.

There should be a compliance with statutes requiring that a return, affidavit, or other proof of execution of process be filed in the court wherein the action is brought or pending,<sup>51</sup> in order that the record may disclose the time and manner of service,<sup>52</sup> and it has been held that, where so required, such filing is necessary to constitute the due return of the process,<sup>53</sup> and that without it the court acquires no jurisdiction.<sup>54</sup> According to other authorities, however, it is not essential that the return, affidavit, or proof be filed before default or judgment,<sup>55</sup> or at least a failure to file proof of service within the time prescribed by statute does not in itself deprive the court of jurisdiction,<sup>56</sup> and the court may permit a later filing nunc pro tunc.<sup>57</sup> In determining whether the court should allow a writ to be entered after its return day, each case is to be decided on its merits in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion.<sup>58</sup> Under some statutes, it is only in case of personal service that the summons must be returned with the sheriff's certificate of service or any other person's affidavit of service,<sup>59</sup> and it is not required, in case of publication, that the summons be returned with the affidavits of publication and mailing.<sup>60</sup>

A rule of court providing that process is deemed served when proof of service is filed merely fixes the date from which the time to answer runs,<sup>61</sup> and does not make the filing of proof a part of the service itself.<sup>62</sup>

Sufficiency of filing. Unless otherwise provided by statute, a return of process or proof of service thereof is filed when given into the custody of the clerk of the court,<sup>63</sup> and his indorsement thereon of a filing mark is not essential.<sup>64</sup>

Purpose of statute

The statutory requirement that summons be returned with proofs of service is primarily for the benefit of the court, since its purpose is to apprise the court that due service has been had on the defendant.—Bourgeois v. Santa Fe Trail Stages, 95 P.2d 204, 43 N.M. 453.

IV. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND AMENDMENTS

A. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS

§ 106. Persons Entitled to Object

As a general rule, the question of defective service may be raised only by the one on whom attempted service was made, and one defendant is not entitled to urge defects in the service on a codefendant.

As a general rule, the question of defective service may be raised only by the one on whom attempted service was made,<sup>65</sup> and one defendant is not entitled to urge defects in the service on his codefendants.<sup>66</sup> A party may be permitted to quash his own writ and thereby work a discontinuance of the action.<sup>67</sup> Service ordinarily will not be set aside on the motion of one not a party to the action.<sup>68</sup> In an action to determine rights in a life insurance policy the beneficiaries are proper and necessary parties, and defendant insurer may, therefore, move to vacate an order for service on them by publication.<sup>69</sup> In a proceeding to determine ownership of a fund, defendant who assigned his interest after service and before special appearance and motion to quash is not in a position to litigate the validity of service.<sup>70</sup>

process to foreclose chattel mortgages cannot urge want of service of legal process on defendant.<sup>71</sup>

Objections by plaintiff. In the absence of an apparent material variance between it and the original writ, plaintiff cannot question service of a branch summons on a defendant against whom he had discontinued suit.<sup>72</sup>

§ 107. Grounds for Quashing or Abating Writ

The grounds on which writs may be quashed or abated include most defects and irregularities in the writ or service which are sufficient to invalidate it and are not so trivial that they will be disregarded; but process will not be abated or set aside where it is not irregular or defective, or, if it is, where a party is not prejudiced by the errors or irregularities and it does not violate mandatory provisions of the law.

The grounds on which writs may be quashed or abated are numerous, and include most defects and irregularities in the writ or service which are sufficient to invalidate it under the rules discussed supra § 5 et seq, and are not so trivial that they will be disregarded.<sup>73</sup> Thus it may be ground for abating

Defendant who interposes an equitable answer in a law action is in no position to object to failure to serve codefendant.—Cranston v. Ingle, 261 P. 55, 123 Or. 280.

Presumption

Where maker of notes secured by mortgage was served without state under statute relating to service on nonresidents, fact that petition failed to allege that maker was nonresident held not fatal to suit as to indorser, since, until contrary was proved, it would be presumed that maker was a nonresident.—Paden v.

American State Bank & Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 243, error dismissed.

Necessity of valid judgment

In revocatory action by creditors to set aside sale of realty by debtor to purchaser, where purchaser objected to going to trial without all proper parties before the court, and debtor had not been legally served with citation, purchaser could question the service on debtor without filing an exception of nonjoinder of proper parties in limine litis, since a valid judgment against debtor is a prerequisite to right of creditor to revoke sale.—Williams & Miller v. Jones, La.App., 180 So. 140.

Exceptional circumstances

In beneficiary's action on life policy against an Italian company whose property vested in the alien property custodian, a suggestion of interest by United States on theory that, if beneficiary was allowed to take judgment by default, she might have a stronger claim to share in fund in custodian's hands than she could establish without such a judgment, was a sufficient interest to support motion by United States to vacate service of summons on state superintendent of insurance and dismiss the action.—Silberfeld v. General Ins. Co., Limited, of Trieste and Venice, 53 N.Y.S.2d 83, 183 Misc. 845.

or quashing a writ that summons was served under an unconstitutional statute;<sup>74</sup> that it was not served the number of days before the return day required by law;<sup>75</sup> that it issued in the wrong county;<sup>76</sup> that it issued prematurely;<sup>77</sup> that it issued without affidavits required by statute;<sup>78</sup> and that the return day was altered without authority after issuance.<sup>79</sup> It may also constitute ground for quashing or abating the writ or process that service was obtained by fraud;<sup>80</sup> that the writ issued without a proper seal;<sup>81</sup> that it was not, when required, signed by the clerk of the court from which it issued;<sup>82</sup> that it does not show the day, month, and year when it was signed;<sup>83</sup> and that defendant is not designated with sufficient accuracy.<sup>84</sup>

A writ or summons may be quashed or abated on the ground that it contains no return day,<sup>85</sup> or a confusing one;<sup>86</sup> that it commands defendant to appear on an impossible date;<sup>87</sup> that it is returnable on a day or to a court not authorized by law;<sup>88</sup> that it is directed to an officer who is disqualified from serving it;<sup>89</sup> and that it was served by a disqualified or unauthorized person.<sup>90</sup> Other grounds for quashing or abating a writ are that it lacks a suitable indorsement under the requirement of a statute;<sup>91</sup> that no authority is indorsed on it for the indifferent person who made service to serve it;<sup>92</sup> that it contains no declaration when such pleading is a necessary part of it;<sup>93</sup> that names are inserted in it which are not authorized by the statute;<sup>94</sup> that it has no teste,<sup>95</sup> or bears teste on Sunday,<sup>96</sup> or bears the teste of an unauthorized person;<sup>97</sup> and that it fails to state the amount of damages demanded.<sup>98</sup>

It may be cause for quashing or vacating a writ or other process that the writ was filled out on a blank previously used and entered in another action,<sup>99</sup> or was altered after having been filled out for use in another action;<sup>1</sup> that it was served on a defendant while privileged from service,<sup>2</sup> although as to this there is authority to the contrary;<sup>3</sup> that it does not have the style required by law;<sup>4</sup> that there is a misnomer of plaintiff<sup>5</sup> and, although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>6</sup> that there is a misnomer of defendant,<sup>7</sup> except where the real names of defendants are not known.<sup>8</sup> It is also ground for setting aside the writ that the process does not sufficiently advise defendant of the names of plaintiffs;<sup>9</sup> that it does not designate with certainty the day on which defendant is commanded to appear;<sup>10</sup> that the summons was issued upon a petition not verified as required by statute;<sup>11</sup> that the place of holding court is not designated;<sup>12</sup> and that a supplemental summons was served without leave of court.<sup>13</sup> Other matters held to constitute grounds for vacating a writ are that in case of an alias writ there had been a discontinuance prior to its issuance,<sup>14</sup> or that the writ was issued while the original valid summons was still outstanding;<sup>15</sup> that the cause of action is not indorsed on the writ;<sup>16</sup> and that there is a variance between the declaration and the writ;<sup>17</sup> or, in the case of a branch summons, between the original and the branch writs.<sup>18</sup>

Invulnerable process. Process will not be abated or set aside where it is not irregular or defective,<sup>19</sup> or, if it is, where a party is not prejudiced by the errors or irregularities<sup>20</sup> and it does not violate mandatory provisions of the law.<sup>21</sup> The courts have shown great liberality in permitting irregularities or defects of form in a summons to be disregarded,<sup>22</sup> and numerous matters have been held not to constitute ground for setting aside the writ under the terms of statutes declaring that all defects and errors in the process or proceedings shall be disregarded unless they affect the substantial rights of the parties,<sup>23</sup> or providing that no summons or the service thereof shall be set aside where there is sufficient substance about either to inform defendant that there is an action brought against him in court.<sup>24</sup> Under some statutes insufficiency of service of process on a part of defendants is not ground for abatement, but the cause will be continued for proper service.<sup>25</sup>

It is no ground for abatement that there was a mere irregularity in the service respecting a matter not necessary to confer jurisdiction;<sup>26</sup> that there are defects in the return which do not show insufficient service but merely fail to state enough facts to show a good service;<sup>27</sup> that it was not directed to an officer who might have served it, where it was in fact directed to one who could and did;<sup>28</sup> that service was made by a deputized person;<sup>29</sup> or that the blank writ was filled up by an unauthorized person, plaintiff not being at fault.<sup>30</sup> So the process will not be set aside for a mere technical variance between the summons and the pleading,<sup>31</sup> for defects in the declaration,<sup>32</sup> or for an obvious clerical error as to the date of filing the petition.<sup>33</sup>

It is no ground for quashing or setting aside the writ that it misdescribed the form of action, where it was correct in all other essential particulars;<sup>34</sup> that no complaint was filed, or copy served, where the summons served contained the complaint;<sup>35</sup> or that there has been a former adjudication of the same cause of action.<sup>36</sup> If the sheriff is not bound to serve a writ for a nonresident plaintiff unless security for costs is indorsed on it, service made without such indorsement is nevertheless good.<sup>37</sup> If the only defect in the writ is that it commands appearance, in a shorter time than is allowed by law, the writ will not be held bad, according to some authorities, but defendant will be granted such an extension of time as he is entitled to;<sup>38</sup> but other cases hold this a proper ground for quashing the writ<sup>39</sup> or setting aside the service, as discussed infra § 108. Although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>40</sup> it has been held that, if a capias issues in a case where only a summons is authorized, the writ is not to be dismissed, but defendant is entitled to be discharged from custody without giving bail;<sup>41</sup> and a writ improperly issued as an attachment against the body of the defendant, but which is not served by attaching his body, is not abatable.<sup>42</sup>

§ 108. Grounds for Quashing or Setting Aside Service or Return

- a. In general
- b. Substituted or constructive service

a. In General

The grounds for quashing or setting aside the service or return include most defects and irregularities in the writ, service, or return which are sufficient to invalidate it, but service of process should not be set aside lightly.

The grounds for quashing or setting aside the service or return include most defects and irregularities in the writ or service which are sufficient to invalidate it under the rules discussed supra § 5 et seq. and are not so trivial that they will be disregarded.<sup>43</sup> Thus the motion may be made on the ground that service was procured fraudulently<sup>44</sup> or through abuse of the court's process;<sup>45</sup> that the service was irregular;<sup>46</sup> or that defendant was

Enticement

Personal service obtained by inveigling or enticing the person to be served into the territorial jurisdiction of the court, by means of fraud and deceit, actual or legal, or by trick or device, or by the use of force, is void and will be set aside. #### Pretense of settlement Service will be set aside where defendant is induced to come into the jurisdiction by pretense of settlement, and process is served on him, whether the matter of a settlement was first broached by plaintiff or defendant.

Circumstances held not to require setting aside of service

(1) In general.

51 N.Y.S.2d 349, affirmed 52 N.Y.S. 2d 945, 268 App.Div. 1037, appeal denied 53 N.Y.S.2d 952, 269 App. Div. 664.

(2) Misstatements which mislead a defendant and induce him to appear where service may be, and is, made on him, which otherwise would not have been made, afford no ground for vacating the service, provided the trick does not lure the person into the jurisdiction.

U.S.—Schwarz v. Artercraft Silk Hosiery Mills, C.C.A.N.Y., 110 F.2d 465.

50 C.J. p 587 note 61.

Inveigling or enticing person to be served into jurisdiction of court by fraud and deceit, or by trick or device to obtain service of process on him, constitutes abuse of process, and service obtained under such circumstances is ineffective when properly challenged, and will be vacated.—Kelly v. Citizens Farmers Nat. Bank of Chickasha, supra.

brought into, or kept within, the jurisdiction on criminal process.<sup>47</sup> Likewise, the service or return may be set aside on the ground that service was made on a person privileged from service,<sup>48</sup> or on a nonresident;<sup>49</sup> that both parties are nonresidents, and that the cause of action did not arise within the state;<sup>50</sup> that service was made on the wrong person;<sup>51</sup> that there was a failure to serve a copy of the complaint with the summons;<sup>52</sup> or that the copy of the summons was left at the wrong place.<sup>53</sup>

Other grounds for quashing or setting aside the service or return are that service was made by an unauthorized officer;<sup>54</sup> that service was made in the wrong county;<sup>55</sup> that the writ commands appearance in less time than is allowed by law;<sup>56</sup> that a material part of the process was omitted;<sup>57</sup>

and that the name of plaintiff's attorney was not indorsed on the summons,<sup>58</sup> or on the copy served.<sup>59</sup> The service or return may also be set aside for the reason that the copy served was not a true copy;<sup>60</sup> that a return of "not found" is false;<sup>61</sup> that the summons required defendant to answer a complaint "which has been filed in the office of the clerk," when in fact none was filed;<sup>62</sup> and that the copy served was not attested.<sup>63</sup> It may also constitute good ground for setting aside the service or return that defendant was dead at the time of the alleged service;<sup>64</sup> that the return is ambiguous;<sup>65</sup> that the date and place of service were not indorsed on a copy of the summons as required by statute;<sup>66</sup> that the person on whom service was made was not an agent of defendant;<sup>67</sup> or that the writ was not

Conditional designation

Service of supplemental summons and complaint should have been vacated, where service was not had personally on alleged corporate agent, and agreement to designate him for service was conditioned on forbearance of action until final determination of litigation between plaintiff and another.—*Schultze v. Kan.—Lyman Flood Prevention Ass'n v. City of Topeka, 106 P.2d 117, 152 Kan. 484.
50 C.J. p 587 note 64.

Witness

Service of subpoena on one who voluntarily came into state as witness would be set aside, since he was immune from process.—Morgen Flour Corporation v. Markowitz, 296 N.Y.S. 64, 251 App.Div. 739.

Ohio.—Canton Provision Co. v. Gauder, 196 N.E. 634, 130 Ohio St. 43.

Foreign corporation

Question whether summons was served on officer, agent, or employee of foreign corporation in district, as required by statute, may be raised by motion to quash service of summons.—Bloedorn v. Washington Times Co., 39 F.2d 835, 67 App.D.C. 91.

In rem jurisdiction

Where husband was served in separation action with motion papers for temporary alimony and with summons and complaint while claiming to be a resident of another state but wife was a resident of forum entitled to prosecute action, motion to vacate service on ground that court lacked jurisdiction would be denied, since, if husband were not a domiciliary, then service did not confer in personam jurisdiction but did confer in rem jurisdiction.—Doty v. Doty, 88 N.Y.S.2d 328, 194 Misc. 907.

Reservation of rights

In action for separation defendant's motion to set aside service of summons and complaint on ground of lack of jurisdiction in that defendant was domiciled in another state where process was served personally on him would be denied with leave to defendant to serve an answer reserving his rights by iterating the jurisdictional objection, since the important question of jurisdiction should not be decided on affidavits.—Zatarga v. Zatarga, 92 N.Y.S.2d 222, 196 Misc. 448.

Service of process should not, however, be set aside lightly,<sup>69</sup> and errors, defects, or delays which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties should be disregarded.<sup>70</sup> Accordingly it has been held that it is not ground for quashing service that there was a misjoinder of actions<sup>71</sup> or of parties plaintiff;<sup>72</sup> that defendants were designated by supposed names, their real names being unknown;<sup>73</sup> or that there has been a former adjudication of the same cause of action.<sup>74</sup> After a defective writ has been amended by leave of court, the original service cannot be set aside because the copy served did not conform to the writ as amended.<sup>75</sup> When the entry of a writ is required to be made in the sheriff's book, failure to make it is no ground for setting aside the service, since such entry is merely evidence of the delivery of the process to the sheriff.<sup>76</sup>

The lack of an indorsement of the cause of action on a summons which is required, not by statute, but only by rule of court, is not ground for setting aside the service;<sup>77</sup> and a mere irregularity consisting of the failure of the summons to state the street number of plaintiff's attorney is not ground for setting aside the service.<sup>78</sup> Service will not be set aside because of a mistake in returning the writ to the wrong clerk's office;<sup>79</sup> and, if the return is false, a motion to set aside the service on the ground that the court is without jurisdiction is not the proper remedy.<sup>80</sup> A motion to set aside the service of process is not a proper method of contesting the jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter of the cause.<sup>81</sup> If the return shows that there was no service whatever on the person authorized to accept service, no application can be given to a statute providing that no summons or service shall be set aside where there is sufficient substance about either to inform the party on whom service is made that there is an action instituted against him, of the name of plaintiff therein, and of the court and time where and when he is to appear.<sup>82</sup>

It may be ground for quashing or setting aside substituted or constructive service that statutory requirements therefor have not been complied with; but immaterial defects may be such as not to warrant quashing of the constructive service.

It may be ground for quashing or setting aside substituted service that statutory requirements therefor have not been complied with.<sup>83</sup> Where defendant shows that he was not absent from the state, and had not been for some time, when an order for substituted service was made on affidavits, a motion to vacate the order, service, and judgment entered against defendant will be granted.<sup>84</sup> Under a statute providing that substituted service may not be made on a nonresident defendant unless a cause of action appears to exist against him, insufficiency of the complaint is ground for a motion to quash an attempted substituted service.<sup>85</sup>

Service by publication may be set aside on motion where it is insufficient,<sup>86</sup> as where the order of publication does not have the requisites provided for

Avoidance of service

Fact that wife and husband allegedly left United States to avoid service of process was held immaterial as respects right of wife who was not resident of state to have vacated order permitting substituted service of process on her.—McCandless v. Reuter, 288 N.Y.S. 952, 248 App.Div. 93.

84. N.Y.—Clarkson v. Butler, 159 N.Y.S. 343, 173 App.Div. 143.

85. U.S.—Frawley v. Chakos, D.C. Wis., 36 F.2d 373.

86. Cal.—Mix v. Yoakum, 31 P.2d 1071, 138 Cal.App. 290.

No justiciable matter

Constructive service of process and proceedings to quiet title purporting to be against unknown claimants of unknown claim was properly quashed in that the bill failed to submit for determination a justiciable matter.—Key v. All Persons Claiming Any Estate, etc., Upon Real Property Described in Bill of Complaint in Said Cause, 36 So.2d 366, 160 Fla. 723.

by the statute;<sup>87</sup> where there is no property within the state to give the court jurisdiction;<sup>88</sup> where the publication notice gives less than the statutory time to answer;<sup>89</sup> where publication was in a newspaper not designated in the order;<sup>90</sup> or where the essential facts on which the order is based are erroneously stated.<sup>91</sup>

Service by publication may ordinarily be set aside where the order is based on insufficient affidavits.<sup>92</sup> It has been held, however, that defendant actually receiving a copy of the summons and complaint cannot be heard to complain that the affidavit, on which service by publication was ordered, was defective,<sup>93</sup> and where, notwithstanding the affidavits on which the order is made are defective, it appears that there was another sufficient affidavit used before the judge on procuring the order which had not been filed, a motion to set aside the order, on the ground that it had been allowed on insufficient affidavits, will be denied, since the statutes do not expressly require that the affidavits shall be filed, or provide what shall be done with them.<sup>94</sup> Even though the affidavits on which the order is based are sufficient in form, service may be set aside where it is shown that plaintiff knew that defendant was not a non-resident.<sup>95</sup>

sonal and beyond the jurisdiction of the court;<sup>96</sup> but it has also been held that the fact that plaintiff demands a greater measure of relief than can be given him in an action begun without personal service of summons is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the service,<sup>97</sup> and that, if any of the relief sought was in its nature in rem, a motion to quash on the ground that movant was not personally interested was properly denied.<sup>98</sup> Where an order of publication is void, it and all subsequent proceedings may be set aside on motion,<sup>99</sup> although defendant could have ignored the service.<sup>1</sup>

Immaterial defects may be such as not to warrant quashing of the constructive service.<sup>2</sup> So the mere failure of the clerk to file an order for service by publication will not deprive the court of jurisdiction;<sup>3</sup> nor is the date of the summons so important that service will be set aside because of a variance in this respect between the original and the copy.<sup>4</sup> A motion to quash service by publication should be overruled where plaintiff was entitled to make such service on a ground incidentally stated in the affidavit in terms not sufficiently specific as to facts.<sup>5</sup>

§ 109. Procedure

Alleged defects in process must be raised by objections to the court from which the process issued.

Defendant cannot with impunity ignore an actual

Title to attached goods

Where plaintiff attempted to obtain jurisdiction of defendant by service of process personally without the state after making an alleged levy under a warrant of attachment on goods within the state, whether title to the attached goods was in defendant or a third person could be determined only by proceedings in compliance with statute, not by motion to set aside the service.—David S. In action, wherein plaintiff obtained order of publication of service of summons on defendant outside the state, defendant's motion to vacate service of summons because no notice as required by civil practice rule was annexed to papers served would be denied.—Johnson v. Johnson, supra.

Foreign judgment

A motion for an order setting aside an order of publication and service of summons on nonresident defendant in a matrimonial action wherein defendant interposed a foreign divorce as a bar to the institution of a matrimonial action would be denied, since the question of recognition of the foreign judgment could best be determined at trial.—Ouvre v. service of process because of an alleged defect in form therein but must submit objections to the court from which the process issued.<sup>6</sup> If the service of summons is merely defective and as such is subject to attack, it is valid until attacked and confers jurisdiction on the person served.<sup>7</sup>

§ 110. — Mode of Taking Objections

- a. In general
- b. Motions
- c. Plea or answer

a. In General

Objection to defects and irregularities with respect to process or the service or return should be raised in the proper manner, and ordinarily demurrer is not the proper mode of raising the objection.

Objection to defects and irregularities with respect to process or the service or return should be raised in the proper manner.<sup>8</sup> While it may be proper, in particular circumstances, to raise such objection by motion or answer, as discussed infra subdivisions b and c of this section, or by plea in abatement, as considered in Abatement and Revival §§ 87, 105, or by motion to dismiss, as discussed in Dismissal and Nonsuit § 62, a defendant, who was not served with process and is unwilling to submit

himself to the jurisdiction of the court, may, as an alternative to raising the objection by motion, allow a default judgment to go against him,<sup>9</sup> after which the remedy is not by motion to quash,<sup>10</sup> but by direct attack on the judgment.<sup>11</sup>

Demurrer. Defects and irregularities as to process ordinarily cannot be raised by demurrer,<sup>12</sup> whether general<sup>13</sup> or special.<sup>14</sup> Accordingly, a demurrer for want of jurisdiction over the person of defendant will not lie merely for want of a proper service of writ or summons,<sup>15</sup> or because defendant has not been properly brought before the court.<sup>16</sup> It has been held, however, that a special demurrer filed by a defendant made a new party to an action by an amended petition without ever having any summons issued or served on him is properly sustained.<sup>17</sup>

b. Motions

Defects with respect to process may, in a proper case, be raised by a motion to set aside or quash the writ, service, or return, or, in the case of service by publication, by a motion to vacate the order for publication.

As a general rule, defects with respect to process may, in a proper case, be raised by a motion to set aside or quash the writ,<sup>18</sup> or the service or return;<sup>19</sup>

(1) Where direction of summons and time, place, and manner of service appeared on face of summons and return, sufficiency of service respecting personal jurisdiction was held properly raised by motion to quash.—Yates v. Casteel, 49 S.W.2d 68, 329 Mo. 1101.

Jurisdiction over person

A motion to quash service of process in automobile case on secretary of state, on ground that defendant was a resident, was proper method and acknowledgments of service may also be set aside in proper cases.<sup>20</sup> It has been held that the distinction between motions to quash and to set aside is that a motion to set aside attacks the truth and not the sufficiency of the facts stated,<sup>21</sup> while a motion to quash attacks the sufficiency and not the truth of the facts stated;<sup>22</sup> but it seems that this distinction is not observed.<sup>23</sup> A motion cannot be made in one action to set aside the summons in another.<sup>24</sup>

Although in some jurisdictions a motion to quash supported by affidavits is considered proper practice where the defect is not apparent on the face of the record,<sup>25</sup> a motion to quash is usually available as to patent defects,<sup>26</sup> and only as to such defects;<sup>27</sup> a plea in abatement ordinarily should be used when, and only when, the defect or objection is not apparent on the face of the record, as discussed in Abatement and Revival § 105, and a challenge to a return presenting a question of fact which can be raised and tried only on a plea in abatement should not be made by motion to quash.<sup>28</sup> Where some defects are apparent and others are not, defendant is entitled to elect between a motion to dismiss the writ for the apparent defects, or to plead in abatement for the defects not shown,<sup>29</sup> but he cannot do both.<sup>30</sup> It has been said that courts do not favor motions to quash for jurisdictional defects.<sup>31</sup>

A motion to quash the summons does not go to the merits of the controversy, but its purpose is to show that, although plaintiff may have a just cause of action, defendant has not been properly brought into court so as to require him to answer on the merits.<sup>32</sup> Under some statutes a motion to quash summons confers jurisdiction of the person of the defendant as effectually as though he had been legally served with process,<sup>33</sup> but the motion does not constitute a waiver by defendant of the question of jurisdiction over the subject matter or venue of the action.<sup>34</sup> Trial of the case without a motion to quash the summons having been brought up constitutes an abandonment of the motion.<sup>35</sup>

Motion to vacate order for publication. The court has power, on its own motion, to vacate a void order for service of summons by publication previously made in the case.<sup>36</sup> If the order is not void, however, the court can set it aside only on motion made within a reasonable time,<sup>37</sup> or by action where all of the interested parties have an opportunity to be heard.<sup>38</sup>

Motion to strike affirmative defenses. The question of the legality and sufficiency of service by publication and mailing of the original process in an alleged judgment of foreclosure should be decided on the trial, and not on a motion to strike affirmative defenses in the answer.<sup>39</sup> of questioning jurisdiction over defendant's person.—Carlson v. District Court of City and County of Denver, 180 P.2d 525, 116 Colo. 330.

"Falsity" and "insufficiency"

"Falsity" of a sheriff's return of service is not the same as an "insufficiency" thereof within statute permitting "insufficiency" of service of process to be raised by motion.—Anthony v. Downs Amusement Co., 205 S.W.2d 925, 239 Mo.App. 1136.

Objection to substituted service

Where question of jurisdiction over nonresident defendant's person depends solely on whether cause of action is in personam or in rem or quasi in rem, and underlying factual subject matter appears on face of bill, objection to substituted service of process by publication may be made on special appearance by motion to set aside such service.—*Jurewicz v. ### c. Plea or Answer

In some jurisdictions, but not in others, the failure to obtain jurisdiction of defendant by proper service of process may be attacked by answer; and under some practice objection to an apparently valid return of service, requiring resort to extrinsic testimony, may be made by a traverse of the officer's return.

Under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions, the failure to obtain jurisdiction of defendant by proper service of process may be asserted in an answer as a defense;<sup>40</sup> but in other jurisdictions service cannot be attacked in the answer.<sup>41</sup> In any event, after the question of defects in process has been raised and determined on motion to quash, it cannot be raised again by answer;<sup>42</sup> but, where relief was refused in the first instance on the ground that it could not thus be obtained, defendant is not precluded from resorting to the proper procedure.<sup>43</sup> Under some practice, before judgment, a false return regarding service of summons may be taken advantage of by a plea to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of defendant.<sup>44</sup>

As discussed in Abatement and Revival §§ 87, 105, a defect in the writ itself is available by plea in abatement, and the same is true of a defective service; and a plea in abatement should be used when the defect is not apparent on the face of the record.

Traverse of return. Under some statutes, when the record shows what purports to be a valid return of service, and it is necessary to resort to extrinsic testimony to show that there has been no service, or an invalid service, the objection can be made by a traverse of the officer's return.<sup>45</sup> Such traverse must be filed at the first term after notice of the return<sup>46</sup> and before pleading to the merits;<sup>47</sup> but it need not be filed before the appearance or return term to which the suit is filed.<sup>48</sup> The traverse is a distinct and independent proceeding from the affidavit of illegality.<sup>49</sup> So an affidavit of illegality will not take the place of a traverse,<sup>50</sup> although the traverse may be included in such an affidavit.<sup>51</sup>

§ 111. — Requisites of Motion, Plea, or Traverse

b. Traverse of return

a. In General

It is usually required that the motion to quash should point out clearly the defect complained of and specify the grounds on which it is based; and all grounds of objection not set up are deemed waived or abandoned.

Although it has been held that a general objection is sufficient,<sup>52</sup> it is usually required that the motion

Special answer

Defendant challenging court's jurisdiction by traversing return of service should proceed by special answer in abatement, not by motion to vacate subpoena.—U. S. v. Doscher, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.Supp. 265.

Service in another county

Question of court's jurisdiction over person of defendant served in another county must be raised by answer where petition on its face shows joint liability of defendants, and one is served in county in which action is brought.—Maloney v. #### Who may object

The traverse to the return of a sheriff cannot be made by any one except defendant in the attachment proceedings.—Pace v. Tarver, 92 S. E. 227, 19 Ga.App. 708.

Knowledge of defendant

Where return of service was made with defendant's knowledge, defendant was precluded thereby from denying service without traversing return of service and making sheriff a party.—Benton v. Maddox, 192 S.E. 316, 56 Ga.App. 132.

to quash should point out clearly the defect complained of and specify the grounds on which it is based,<sup>53</sup> and nothing beyond the scope of the motion will be considered.<sup>54</sup> All grounds of objection not set up are deemed waived or abandoned.<sup>55</sup> Where there is an argumentative denial of the return of the officer on a summons only the return of the officer must prevail.<sup>56</sup> The rule that a plea in abatement must give plaintiff a better writ does not apply to a motion presenting a question of privilege.<sup>57</sup> A motion to quash service of summons on the ground that jurisdiction was collusively invoked is subject to the same attack with respect to its sufficiency as if the question were raised by plea.<sup>58</sup>

Necessity of accompanying affidavits. It has been held that a motion to quash alleging a fact determinable only by evidence must be supported by affidavits,<sup>59</sup> but, if the illegality of the summons is apparent from the return to the writ, an accompanying affidavit is unnecessary,<sup>60</sup> and in some jurisdictions it is the rule that a motion to set aside a summons for failure of service should be supported by depositions properly taken, rather than by ex parte affidavits.<sup>61</sup>

The traverse of a return must contain an explicit and unequivocal denial of the specific statements in the return and must also allege that the traverse was made at the proper time. The officer who made the return is a necessary party to a traverse of the return.

Where the traverse of a return is a proper mode of raising an objection to such return, as discussed supra § 110 c, it must contain an explicit and unequivocal denial of the truth of the specific statements in the return,<sup>62</sup> and must also allege that the traverse was made at the proper time.<sup>63</sup> A return which shows on its face that the service was void need not be traversed;<sup>64</sup> and, where the case presents no issue as to the truth or falsity of the return, a traverse of the return is not necessary.<sup>65</sup> Accordingly, a timely, proper plea to the jurisdiction of the court does not require the aid of a traverse of the return of service made by the officer.<sup>66</sup>

Parties. The officer who made the return is a necessary party to a traverse of the return.<sup>67</sup> If the return was made by a deputy sheriff, both he and the sheriff are necessary parties;<sup>68</sup> and, if either is dead when the traverse is made, his legal representative must be named.<sup>69</sup> Where the traverse is filed at the first term after notice of entry, and before pleading to the merits, the officer whose return is thus attacked may be made a party thereto at a subsequent term,<sup>70</sup> and the traverse may be amended at the subsequent term by making the personal representative of the person, since deceased, who was sheriff at the time of entry of service by the deputy, a party to the proceeding;<sup>71</sup> but it has been held proper to refuse to allow an amendment by which it was attempted to make the sheriff a party,

Amendment

Executor's traverse of sheriff's official return included in affidavit of illegality to levy of execution on property of testator, alleging that since last term of court it had come to executor's notice that sheriff made return of service on petition was held amendable at subsequent term of court to show that testator had no notice of return of sheriff before his death within time to have traversed return of officer as required by law.—National Realty Co. v. #### Erroneous refusal of amendment

In proceeding to revive a dormant judgment, error in refusing to permit defendant so to amend traverse rendered further rulings and judgment nugatory.—Eldson v. Citizens Bank & Trust Co., supra.

when the amendment was offered after the first term, after notice, and after pleading to the merits.<sup>72</sup>

Failure to make an officer a party renders any proceeding on the traverse void,<sup>73</sup> and the failure to object that both sheriff and deputy were not made parties thereto does not validate the traverse.<sup>74</sup> Where an affidavit of illegality was filed, the mere filing of the traverse to the entry of service by the sheriff, and service of a copy thereof on the sheriff by a private individual, did not make the sheriff a party thereto.<sup>75</sup> Since it is unnecessary to traverse a return which shows on its face that the service was void, in such a case, the officer need not be made a party to an attack on the service;<sup>76</sup> nor is the officer making service a necessary party where there is no issue affecting the return,<sup>77</sup> as where defendant files a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that defendant was a resident of another county.<sup>78</sup>

a. In General

The trial court has control over its process in a pending action, and it may hear and determine objections with respect to such process, and, in a proper case, quash or set aside the process or service; but the legality or regularity of process or service can be determined only when properly presented to the court for decision.

The trial court has control over its process in a pending action,<sup>79</sup> and it may hear and determine objections with respect to such process, and, in a proper case, quash or set aside the process or service.<sup>80</sup> However, the legality or regularity of process or service can be determined only when properly presented to the court for decision,<sup>81</sup> and the court cannot, in advance, on motion, give instructions marking out the future procedure in an action.<sup>82</sup> The question as to whether the court has obtained jurisdiction of defendant by service of process is one of fact, to be determined by the court on proof by affidavit or otherwise, and, if nonservice is disputed by plaintiff, he should meet the issue by proof of service.<sup>83</sup>

Time of hearing. The issue raised by a motion to set aside service should be determined before requiring defendant to plead to the merits.<sup>84</sup> The trial judge in the exercise of a sound discretion may continue the hearing on a motion to quash service of summons and grant defendant time to take dep-

Jurisdiction

(1) Court has jurisdiction, where validity of summons is challenged, to determine whether summons was of such character as to give defendant the notice required by statute.—James River Nat. Bank v. Haas, 15 N.W.2d 442, 73 N.D. 374, 154 A.L.R. 1005.

(2) State court has jurisdiction to pass on motion to quash summons served on nonresident while within the state for military service.—Northwestern Casualty & Surety Co. v. Conaway, 230 N.W. 548, 210 Iowa 126, 68 A.L.R. 1465.

Quashing process of another court see Courts § 496 a.

Every court of record, unless restrained by positive enactment, has the power, on motion, to vacate its process to prevent a perversion thereof or to frustrate oppression.—Litsky v. Fulton Operating Corp., 71 N.Y.S.2d 30, 189 Misc. 397.

Issue of fact held raised

Plaintiff's answer to petition to strike off the return was held improperly treated as a demurrer and as raising no issue of fact where answer after setting forth sheriff's return asserted that sheriff's return "contains the truth" and return which was made part of answer controverted every essential averment of petition.—Vaughn v. Love, 188 A. 299, 324 Pa. 276, 107 A.L.R. 1336.

Prompt determination

Where notice of motion to set aside substituted service of process on nonresident defendant by publication is broad enough to encompass court's debatable jurisdiction to render any effective decree against such defendant, such issue should be promptly determined in summary proceeding.—Jurewicz v. Locals 1297, 1392, 2343 of United Broth. of Carpenters and Joiners of America, 49 A.2d 23, 138 N.J.Eq. 493.

ositions.<sup>85</sup>

Reference. Issues of fact may be sent to a referee for determination before passing on a motion to set aside service of summons,<sup>86</sup> but, when the facts are undisputed, the motion should ordinarily be decided by the court, and not sent to a referee.<sup>87</sup>

b. Matters Considered

On a motion to set aside service of process, the legality and regularity of the service ordinarily are the only points to be considered.

On a motion to set aside service of summons, the legality and regularity of the service are the only points to be considered.<sup>88</sup> Thus questions as to whether the complaint states a cause of action,<sup>89</sup> or whether plaintiff's cause has merit,<sup>90</sup> or whether the cause of action arose in the state in which it has been brought,<sup>91</sup> will not be considered on such motion; nor may a party to the action, by motion to quash, have determined in advance of trial any issues of fact arising on the pleadings.<sup>92</sup>

Although it has been held that a motion to quash service of process may be made and determined on affidavits alone,<sup>93</sup> it has also been held that the court may look to the pleadings to ascertain the nature of the cause and to evidentiary matters in the record, and to records in interrelated suits.<sup>94</sup> In considering the motion to quash, the court must adhere to the allegations of the petition,<sup>95</sup> and ordinarily it will assume as true facts stated in the complaint;<sup>96</sup> but on a motion to vacate service of summons and complaint, all allegations made by plaintiff on information and belief, not supported by allegations of evidentiary facts and denied by defendant, must be disregarded.<sup>97</sup> In those juris-

Proper party

On special appearance to quash service of summons, court was limited to a consideration of service made, and could not determine whether defendant making appearance had an interest in the cause or that he was not a proper party defendant.—Graff v. Town of Seward, supra.

50 C.J. p 594 note 3.

Where sufficiency not attacked

On defendant's application to set aside service of summons and complaint on ground that service without the state was unauthorized and ineffectual, complaint would be deemed to state good causes of action for purposes of the application,

Existence of defense

(1) Whether defendant had a defense to plaintiff's alleged cause of action was irrelevant to consideration of defendant's motion to quash service of alias summons on ground that it had not been served within statutory period of limitation for bringing action or within the sixty days' saving period for issuance of alias summons.—Templeman v. Hester, 29 N.E.2d 216, 65 Ohio App. 62.

(2) Assertion that husband had obtained an absolute divorce from wife prior to institution of her action for alimony without divorce was a matter of defense and was irrelevant on motion to quash service of summons made on the ground that husband, at time of service, was immune from process.—Hare v. Hare, 46 S.E.2d 840, 228 N.C. 740.

Estoppel

Contention that plaintiff, in effect, was estopped from prosecuting suit, was held to relate to merits, not determinable on motion to quash service of process.—Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. Smith, D.C.Va., 4 F.Supp. 3.

Strength of position

It has been held, however, that motion to vacate service on ground court has not thereby secured jurisdiction of person of defendant company required inquiry whether strength of defendant's position warranted granting of motion if otherwise appropriate.—Goetz v. Interlake S. S. Co., D.C.N.Y., 47 F.2d 753.

Entries on docket and journal

In passing on a motion to quash an alias summons on jurisdictional grounds, the court has the duty of considering all entries on its docket and journal reflecting the jurisdiction of the court over defendant, including entries involved on the hearing of a motion to quash the first service of summons.—Carr v. Marion Masonic Temple Co., 37 N.E.2d 974, 67 Ohio App. 521.

95. Ohio.—Great Lakes Stages v. Laing, 174 N.E. 784, 38 Ohio App. 34, affirmed 175 N.E. 598, 123 Ohio St. 378.

dictions where the sheriff's return is conclusive between the parties, the court will look only to the face of the return on a motion to set aside the return or the service,<sup>98</sup> except as to those matters respecting which the return is not conclusive.<sup>99</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, the plea may contradict the sheriff's return.<sup>1</sup>

Service by publication. On a motion to vacate an order for publication, in jurisdictions where the disclosure of a cause of action is a prerequisite to service by publication, as discussed supra § 64, the complaint is not to be judged with the same measure of severity which would be applied on a demurrer or motion directly attacking its form or sufficiency;<sup>2</sup> it is sufficient if from all of its allegations there can be gathered those which set forth the substance of a cause of action sufficient to sustain in that respect the order of publication which was made,<sup>3</sup> and every well pleaded allegation of fact therein stands admitted.<sup>4</sup> According to some decisions, however, a motion to quash service of summons by publication is determinable solely on the basis of sufficiency of the affidavit for service by publication, without regard to the sufficiency of the petition to state a cause of action.<sup>5</sup> On such a motion, the court will not pass on the question of defendant's ownership of property on which an attachment was levied as a basis for obtaining jurisdiction of defendant by service of summons by publication, where defendant denied such ownership, but the issue may be raised by answer to be determined at the trial on the merits.<sup>6</sup>

c. Evidence or Proof

Unless the case is one in which prejudice to defendant is presumed, such prejudice must be shown in order to have service set aside. A return will be set aside only on clear and satisfactory evidence.

On the hearing of objections to defects and irregularities in process, general rules of evidence or proof apply,<sup>7</sup> as with respect to presumptions<sup>8</sup> and burden of proof.<sup>9</sup> On the hearing of the motion to quash, every presumption must be indulged in favor of the order for service of summons by publication.<sup>10</sup> Unless the case is one in which prejudice to defendant is presumed, such prejudice must be shown in order to have service set aside.<sup>11</sup> The showing of the moving party must be such as to negative existence of circumstances which would render the service valid,<sup>12</sup> and it has been held that, in order to avail himself of the technical objection that the summons gave only plaintiff's initials, defendant should make a showing as to plaintiff's true name.<sup>13</sup> Since a motion to quash substituted service of process on the secretary of state challenges the court's jurisdiction, plaintiff has the burden of establishing by competent evidence all facts essential to jurisdiction, including non-residence of defendant.<sup>14</sup>

Parol evidence is admissible to show the receipt of service,<sup>15</sup> or to show that the writ, at the time of service, was void.<sup>16</sup> It is improper, however, to hear evidence on a motion presenting solely a question of law<sup>17</sup> determinable from the facts on record.<sup>18</sup> Where no proof was offered at the time the motion was heard, thereafter, on trial of the case on its merits, evidence in support of the motion is inadmissible.<sup>19</sup> Uncontroverted facts recited in the motion to quash will be taken as true.<sup>20</sup> A motion to vacate service, being in the nature of a demurrer, admits the facts alleged in the complaint.<sup>21</sup>

In personal action by summons against single defendant, court, in determining motion to quash summons and return, would presume that defendant was resident of state and county of venue.—Yates v. Casteel, supra.

tial to a valid service which were denied in affidavit supporting motion to quash.—Zazove v. Wilson, supra.

General rules of evidence apply with respect to the weight and sufficiency of evidence as to the validity of service generally,<sup>22</sup> and as to the proof of particular matters arising in a proceeding to quash or set aside process or service.<sup>23</sup> The return will be set aside only on clear and satisfactory evidence,<sup>24</sup> and, where plaintiff's action will be barred by limitation if the service is set aside, the court should be clearly satisfied that the service was insufficient before vacating it,<sup>25</sup> and it should not decide the question solely on affidavits.<sup>26</sup>

On trial of traverse of return. On the trial of a traverse to a return of service, the fact that the traverse is filed within the proper time must be proved.<sup>27</sup> On such trial, the return is to be taken as more than merely prima facie true,<sup>28</sup> and, in order to justify finding against it, the evidence must be the strongest that the nature of the case will permit,<sup>29</sup> and must show that the entry of service is false.<sup>30</sup> When a return of personal service is traversed, proof of service by leaving a copy at defendant's residence will not avail plaintiff.<sup>31</sup>

d. Judgment or Decision

Where supported by affidavits, in the absence of answering affidavits, a motion to quash or set aside process or service should be granted, but, when the movant fails to establish his case, the court should refuse to quash. The court may reconsider its ruling, set aside the order, and enter a contrary one at any time before final judgment.

Where supported by affidavits, in the absence of answering affidavits, a motion to quash or set aside process or service should be granted,<sup>32</sup> but, when movant fails to establish his case, the court should refuse to quash.<sup>33</sup> Although a person other than the moving party is named in the summons as

defendant, the motion will be denied where plaintiff shows that the moving party was the individual sought to be served.<sup>34</sup> If the motion is not pressed, it will be denied.<sup>35</sup> Permitting an amendment so as to avoid the objection raised is virtually to overrule the motion.<sup>36</sup>

The relief granted in case of defective service should be the setting aside of the service, not the dismissal of the action.<sup>37</sup> The proper form of judgment on quashing the writ and return on motion is simply "writ quashed,"<sup>38</sup> and it has been held that, the return having been quashed for service less than ten days before return day, the case is properly remanded to rules.<sup>39</sup> An adverse ruling by the court on the request of a defendant to enter a special appearance to test the validity of constructive service and its ruling that such service was good is in effect an adjudication of the validity of the service and it does not transfer the service into one personal in character and on which a personal judgment could be entered.<sup>40</sup> Under some rules of court, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion to quash service of summons is without prejudice to his right to appear and plead.<sup>41</sup> In a proper case the court may, at plaintiff's expense, compel attendance of the person making the return.<sup>42</sup>

taining or overruling a motion to quash the service of summons,<sup>43</sup> or the return on a summons,<sup>44</sup> is interlocutory and not appealable, the court may reconsider its ruling, set aside the order, and enter a contrary one at any time before final judgment. So, where defendant moved to vacate service of summons, but was denied the opportunity of meeting answering affidavits, he may apply for a rehearing.<sup>45</sup> Where a motion to set aside service is sustained, and a motion for rehearing is filed, the court, by continuing hearing of that motion to the next term, may preserve jurisdiction to correct an error in its earlier ruling.<sup>46</sup> Where the question whether defendant had been legally served with process was determined on conflicting evidence on a motion to vacate the service, affidavit of service, and the default entry, the question is not reviewable on a subsequent motion under statute to vacate a default judgment and permit defendant to answer.<sup>47</sup>

On traverse of return. Issues of fact raised by a traverse to a return should be disposed of at the trial.<sup>48</sup> Where there is no issue of fact, it is not error to direct a verdict on the traverse of the return of service.<sup>49</sup> So, where an affidavit of illegality to a return of service did not make the officer a party, and the traverse was not filed prior to the illegality proceedings, a verdict was properly directed against the affidavit.<sup>50</sup> The traverse to

Opportunity to defend

Affidavit for notice by publication to nonresident defendant stating that defendant was nonresident, and that plaintiff could not procure service of summons on such defendant within state by use of due diligence authorized inference that defendant was not within state at time of filing and issuance of notice and justified denial of motion to quash affidavit and service of notice where defendant appeared in response thereto, was afforded opportunity to original-

Basis

Where motion to quash service of summons was not based on ground that defendant was not amenable to process, but on ground that summons was not served and that it was not properly served, and order sustaining motion did not dismiss petition, the order was not a "final order," but merely an "interlocutory order" which court had jurisdiction to change at any time during pendency of the cause.—Carr v. the return of service of a petition and process will be overruled where the only discrepancy between the copies served and the original was the omission, from the copy of the petition, of address to the proper court.<sup>51</sup> So the traverse will be stricken where it shows on its face that service was complete except that the copy of the petition served was not apparently signed by counsel for plaintiff.<sup>52</sup>

e. Operation and Effect of Ruling

An order vacating service of summons and dismissing an action puts an end to the litigation without a judicial investigation of the merits.

An order vacating service of summons and dismissing an action puts an end to litigation without a judicial investigation of the merits;<sup>53</sup> and the effect of granting a motion to quash service is to declare the service void and not to dismiss the complaint.<sup>54</sup> On the writ being quashed, the case stands as if no writ had been issued.<sup>55</sup> Where one of two defendants pleads the general issue, but the other pleads in abatement because of defects in the writ, on sustaining the plea in abatement the suit should be abated as to one and retained as to the other.<sup>56</sup> Under some statutes it is provided that, where an action abates by reason of an insufficient service or return due to the default or neglect of the officer, a new action may be begun at any time within a specified period.<sup>57</sup>

§ 113. Time for Objections, Waiver, and Cure

b. Waiver

c. Laches and estoppel

d. Cure

a. In General

Objections to defects in process or service may and should be taken within the time, if any, fixed by statute or court rule, or, in the absence of such provision, as early as possible before the taking of steps relating to the merits of the case; but such restrictions as to time for objection do not apply to substantial defects which render the writ or the service void.

Objections to defects in process or service may and should be taken within the time, if any, fixed by statute or court rule,<sup>58</sup> and it is frequently held, often in conformity with a statute or court rule, that objections must be taken not later than the first term on a designated day thereof.<sup>59</sup> A motion to quash a writ for a cause which may be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement must, in general, be made within the time limited for filing a plea in abatement.<sup>60</sup> Independent of any statute, objections to defects in process or service should be made as early as possible or in the first instance,<sup>61</sup> and the failure to interpose a timely objection may preclude the assertion of the defect on the theory of waiver, estoppel, or laches, as discussed infra subdivisions b and c of this section. Inasmuch as a general appearance ordinarily waives all defects and irregularities in the process, service, or return, as discussed in Appearances § 17, a party who wishes to raise any question as to these matters must do so at a preliminary stage, before taking any steps relating to the merits of the case,<sup>62</sup> although, until a voluntary appearance, defendant may attack the validity of process or service.<sup>63</sup> It has been held, however, that these restrictions as to time for objection do not apply to substantial defects which render the writ or the service void,<sup>64</sup> and that, where service of summons is void, the question may be raised by motion to quash at any time, even after entry of appearance in the cause.<sup>65</sup> Any objection to the omission of a prayer for process, and to the failure to attach process, should precede an attack as to service.<sup>66</sup>

Contradiction of return. A return of a sheriff on the summons, where the return is in harmony with the findings of the court in its judgment that defendant was duly served, cannot be contradicted after the term of court has ended in which judgment was rendered,<sup>67</sup> unless a false return has been procured by plaintiff's fraud.<sup>68</sup>

Generally, defendant may waive certain defects or irregularities in process or service, as by failure to assert the defect or irregularity by a timely and appropriate plea or motion, or by participating in the trial on the merits of the case; but, where the defect in the process or service is so substantial as to render the process or service void, it cannot be cured by waiver, consent, or agreement.

As a general rule, defendant may waive certain defects or irregularities in process or service,<sup>69</sup> and accordingly, where process is not in substantial compliance with statutory requirements, although not prohibited by law, the defect may be waived so as to give the trial court jurisdiction.<sup>70</sup> It has been held, however, that a void process cannot be revived by waiver,<sup>71</sup> that, where compliance with statutory provisions as to process is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court, such compliance may not ordinarily be waived,<sup>72</sup> and that, where certain process is prohibited by law, the defect in such process cannot be cured by waiver, consent, or agreement.<sup>73</sup> Waiver by one defendant does not operate as a waiver by other defendants;<sup>74</sup> neither does waiver of service of summons in one court constitute waiver of service in another court.<sup>75</sup>

A failure to assert a defect or irregularity by a timely and appropriate plea or motion is usually regarded as a waiver.<sup>76</sup> Defects in process or service may also be waived by defendant's partici-

Joint and several obligation

Where three defendants are named in suit on joint and several obligation at common law, right to object to plaintiff's failure to perfect service on one may be waived by joining issue and by going to trial without objection.—Harrington v. Bowman, 136 So. 229, 102 Fla. 339, reheard 143 So. 651, 106 Fla. 86.

Inaccurate appellation

Real party in interest, when duly served with summons under inaccurate appellation, must take timely advantage of error by appropriate plea; otherwise defect is waived and judgment against him is conclu-

pation in the trial on the merits of plaintiff's cause of action,<sup>77</sup> by the filing of an answer,<sup>78</sup> by giving a stipulation to answer judgment,<sup>79</sup> or by an express agreement to consider the service good,<sup>80</sup> an agreement to submit the case to referees,<sup>81</sup> or an agreement as to the time and manner of trial.<sup>82</sup> A party will be regarded as waiving defects in process or service by moving, on other grounds, to vacate judgment,<sup>83</sup> or coupling other objections with an objection to the method of service;<sup>84</sup> by not requesting a ruling on the motion to quash before or at the time of submission of the cause,<sup>85</sup> or by answering to the merits before the court rules on the motion;<sup>86</sup> by permitting the process to be amended without objection;<sup>87</sup> or by confessing judgment.<sup>88</sup>

An individual defendant, by designating an agent or attorney to receive service of process for him, may waive service on himself in person;<sup>89</sup> and parties who have entered into a stipulation waiving trial in one court and submitted issue to another cannot attack jurisdiction for lack of process.<sup>90</sup> A party waives defects in service by applying for, and agreeing to, a continuance,<sup>91</sup> but a mere entry in the record that a cause was "continued by consent of parties," where one of several defendants had been duly served, does not constitute a waiver of service, and confer jurisdiction as to defendants who were not served.<sup>92</sup>

Waiver ordinarily is not effected, on the other hand, by merely obtaining an extension of time to answer,<sup>93</sup> or paying part of the judgment;<sup>94</sup> nor is waiver shown by demanding and accepting service of a copy of the complaint while reserving all rights,<sup>95</sup> by filing motions for default against plaintiff for failure to plead, for judgment, and for a bond to prosecute,<sup>96</sup> or by giving notice of motion to strike part of the complaint, which motion was subsequently withdrawn.<sup>97</sup> Defendant's right to have defective process quashed is not limited by the fact that he was in the court room and refused to answer in the case.<sup>98</sup> Where judgment has been rendered, although the process or service was fatally defective, the defect is not waived by moving to set aside such judgment<sup>99</sup> or excepting to it and giving notice of appeal.<sup>1</sup> Taking depositions to be used in the cause, while a motion to quash the writ is pending, is not a proceeding touching the merits of the case which will waive the motion.<sup>2</sup>

sive.—Maloney v. Callahan, 188 N.E. 656, 127 Ohio St. 387.

Motion for withdrawal

Defendant's motion for leave to withdraw his answer and appearance on ground that return of service of citation revealed that citation was issued on Sunday was properly overruled, since the filing of answer was a "waiver" of any defect in citation.—Erbach v. Donald, Tex.Civ.App. 170 S.W.2d 289, error refused.

As incident to special appearance or motion

Where extension of time to answer is merely incidental to, or part of, special appearance or motion attacking complaint or service thereof on jurisdictional grounds, or stay of proceedings is obtained as mere incident to or part of such appearance, no "waiver" of point of improper service of summons results.—Thompson v. Mundheim, 48 N.Y.S.2d 632, 180 Misc. 1002, affirmed 45 N.Y. S.2d 412, 266 App.Div. 1001.

fects or irregularities in the service,<sup>3</sup> but such a waiver cannot bind third parties;<sup>4</sup> nor does it apply to any defects in the summons itself.<sup>5</sup>

Filing of motion to dismiss. It has been held that a party waives objection to defects in process or service by moving to dismiss for want of jurisdiction of the subject matter,<sup>6</sup> or by moving to dismiss because plaintiff improperly named a resident of the county as a defendant solely to give jurisdiction to serve movant in such country;<sup>7</sup> but the filing of a motion to dismiss does not constitute a waiver of defendant's objections to service of process, where the motion to dismiss alleged that the court had no jurisdiction and the court at the hearing permitted the substitution of a motion to quash service.<sup>8</sup>

After objection overruled. Failure to except to an order overruling an objection to a defective summons, service, or return is a waiver of such objection.<sup>9</sup> There is some conflict in the cases as to the effect of answering to the merits after a preliminary objection to the summons, service, or return has been improperly overruled, some authorities holding that the point is not waived at least if an exception is taken,<sup>10</sup> but others holding that the objection is always waived by so answering,<sup>11</sup> provided the lack of jurisdiction over defendant's person is not based on facts dehors the record, that is, on matters outside the face of the return.<sup>12</sup>

Unnecessary or unexcused delay or laches will deprive defendant of the right to urge formal objections to process, service, or return; and defendant, by his conduct, may be estopped to object that due service was not made.

As a general rule, unnecessary or unexcused delay or laches will deprive defendant of the right to urge formal objections to process, service, or return,<sup>13</sup> and, where formally defective process is personally served, or where personal service is improperly made, and defendant makes no appearance and enters no objection to it but lets the cause proceed, he will not be permitted to object at a subsequent term, but will be deemed to have lost his right to attack the defect by his silence.<sup>14</sup> It has been held, however, that a defect which totally invalidates a writ or the service thereof may be taken advantage of at any time regardless of failure to raise objection thereto at the proper time.<sup>15</sup>

Estoppel. Defendant may, by his conduct, be estopped to object that due service was not made,<sup>16</sup> as where the sheriff, at defendant's request, serves the writ in a manner not authorized by law.<sup>17</sup> On the other hand, the circumstances may be such as

Notice of authority

Where defendants' counsel gave plaintiff's counsel written notice of authority conferred on defendants' counsel by defendants to appear and admit service for them and further wrote plaintiff's counsel that defendants' counsel would admit service if plaintiff's counsel would send summons and copy of complaint to defendant's counsel, defendant waived statutory manner and form of service of summons and return made thereon.—Haggerty v. #### After judgment

(1) Objection to process usually is not available after judgment.—Dannenburg v. Powers, 77 P.2d 1142, 182 Okl. 404—50 C.J. p 598 note 1 [a] (3)—33 C.J. p 1092 note 71.

(2) Generally, sheriff's return of summons may not be impeached by oral testimony, after judgment, as to matters recited in return which were clearly within the sheriff's personal knowledge.—Kackley State Bank of Kackley v. Nichols, 179 P.2d 186, 162 Kan. 648.

Reasonable delay

A motion to set aside service of process is not barred by delay for a time no longer than that reasonably necessary to investigate the law and the facts and to prepare supporting affidavits and procure their verification.—Phelps v. Connecticut Co., C.C.N.Y., 188 F. 765.

Opportunity to be heard

Party may not choose time, place, or manner for his defense, or form of notice to be given, and, if he is given reasonable opportunity to appear and has notice thereof, actual or constructive, he must take advantage of it in manner pointed out by law, or be estopped from claiming that he has had no chance to be heard.—Hewins v. Weller, 36 P.2d 799, 44 Ariz. 309.

not to estop defendant to deny the legality of citation in the name of another,<sup>18</sup> and, since defendant is not bound to give notice of a defective service of process, his silence does not estop him from objecting to the want of jurisdiction.<sup>19</sup>

Certain errors and defects in process may be cured by subsequent proceedings, as by the rendition of verdict and judgment, or by nunc pro tunc order; but a void process is not cured by verdict; nor is the omission of a return of service so cured.

Certain errors and defects in process may be cured by subsequent proceedings, even after judgment.<sup>20</sup> So it has been held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provision, that errors and defects in process, to which timely objection was not raised, are cured by verdict and judgment,<sup>21</sup> at least where the process is merely defective and not void;<sup>22</sup> but a void process is no process and is not cured by verdict;<sup>23</sup> nor is the omission of a return of service an amendable defect which is cured by verdict.<sup>24</sup> In a proper case, irregularities may be cured by nunc pro tunc order,<sup>25</sup> or by striking out counts in the declaration;<sup>26</sup> and it has been held that a defective statement of the title of a cause in the process is cured by a correct statement thereof in the petition.<sup>27</sup> The question of the validity of service of summons on defendant in a county other than the county of his residence while attending court as a witness has been held not material where defendant was later served with alias summons in that county while on private business.<sup>28</sup> The failure of the clerk to sign the order of publication may, in some circumstances, be considered merely as a curable irregularity,<sup>29</sup> especially on collateral attack.<sup>30</sup>

While certain errors in process may be regarded as harmless, and cured by recitals of the judgment,<sup>31</sup> ordinarily a recital in the judgment that the court has jurisdiction does not cure an error

Filing and entry of order of publication

(1) The failure to file order of publication to obtain jurisdiction of nonresident defendant may be corrected nunc pro tunc.—Marks v. Provident Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 83 N.Y.S.2d 614, 274 App.Div. 368, appeal denied 85 N.Y.S.2d 322, 274 App.Div. 1017, appeal dismissed 85 N.E.2d 60, 298 N.Y. 917—Hehn v. Nassau County, 51 N.Y.S.2d 300, 268 App.Div. 917—50 C.J. p 534 note 35.

(2) It has also been held, however, that the filing of the order for publication is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the court, and that, if this requirement is not complied with, the court cannot make an order nunc pro tunc to cure the defect.—Pink v. Wallach, 96 N.Y.S. 543, 109 App.Div. 718—Wilson v. Banque Francaise du Mexique, 208 N.Y.S. 213, 124 Misc. 690.

(3) Order for publication may be entered nunc pro tunc at any time before final judgment.—Horn v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank, 25 N.E. 558, 125 Ind. 381, 21 Am.S.R. 231, 9 L.R.A. 676—50 C.J. p 534 note 44.

Defects in affidavit

Defendant's motion to vacate affidavit of service was denied, where defects in affidavit were cured by affidavit which established that service was properly made on defendant and which could be filed nunc pro tunc.—Gullette v. Parish, 65 N.Y. S.2d 731.

Omissions

Where summons was properly issued, under seal, and prosecution bond and verified complaint duly filed, but copies delivered to insurance commissioner for nonresident insurer defendant failed to show name of clerk, seal of court, or name of plaintiff's attorney, nunc pro tunc order supplying such omissions cured defect in service and justified order denying motion to strike out entry of service.—Branch Banking & Trust Co. v. Smith, 187 S.W. 780, 210 N.C. 582.

Service on nonresident

Under circumstances, although requisite affidavit was not filed before summons issued for personal service on nonresident outside state, defect could be supplied nunc pro tunc.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Green, 157 S.E. 797, 200 N.C. 535.

lying in the failure of the record to show service of process or notice as required by statute.<sup>32</sup> Accordingly, recitals of proper service in the judgment<sup>33</sup> or in the record containing the return of service<sup>34</sup> will not cure defects in the official return showing improper service; nor is failure to comply with the statutory requirement of an averment of nonresidence of defendants sought to be served by publication cured, as affecting defendant's rights, by a subsequent recital of such nonresidence in an agreed statement of facts.<sup>35</sup>

An insufficiency in an affidavit or order granting leave for service by publication is not cured by personal service of the summons in another jurisdiction.<sup>36</sup> It has also been held that an affidavit required by statute authorizing service of summons by publication, filed after publication and judgment, does not validate the process,<sup>37</sup> although there is some authority to the contrary.<sup>38</sup> Failure to sign the original process as required by law is not cured by the service of a signed copy of the process on defendant, since the signed copy is not a copy of the unsigned original.<sup>39</sup> Where the order for publication entirely omits to include a direction as to mailing copies of the summons, complaint and order in accordance with the statutory requirements, such defect, it has been held, is not cured by a mailing which satisfies the requirements of the statute,<sup>40</sup> but there is authority to the contrary.<sup>41</sup> A void service of summons under an unconstitutional statute is not validated by a subsequent amendment of the statute eliminating the features of the prior act which rendered it unconstitutional.<sup>42</sup>

B. AMENDMENT OF DEFECTS

§ 114. Amendment of Process

- a. In general
- b. Process amendable
- c. Procedure
- d. Operation and effect

a. In General

A court may, in the furtherance of justice, at any stage of the proceedings, amend its process by correcting mistakes therein, on such terms as it deems just, where such action will not prejudice the rights of the parties or of third persons.

Courts have inherent discretionary power, within certain limitations, to amend their process,<sup>43</sup> and this power is usually declared, defined, and limited by statutes which vary greatly in their terms, but ordinarily repose large discretionary powers in the court.<sup>44</sup> Statutes authorizing the amendment of

Amount of recovery

Where, in action for recovery of money only, summons notifies defendant that plaintiff is seeking judgment for such sum, together with interest thereon from July 30, 1930, instead of from July 24, 1930, as recited in prayer of petition and in præcipe, error appearing on face of summons was held harmless and cured by recital of judgment in journal entry in conformity with prayer of petition.—*Allen v. #### Purpose

Statute authorizing courts to amend any process was enacted for purpose of expediting administration of justice and the prevention of delays in bringing matters to an issue, and authorizes the court to make such amendments as are required for purpose of correcting mistakes so long as the parties are not prejudiced thereby.—State ex rel. Heck v. Sucher, 65 N.E.2d 268, 77 Ohio App. 257.

Mistake, irregularity, or defect

The statute relating to correction of mistake, irregularity, or defect applies to process as well as to other steps in an action.—Barth v. Owens, 35 N.Y.S.2d 632, 178 Misc. 628.

process should be liberally construed,<sup>45</sup> and such a statute, broad in its terms, is to be construed broadly as a remedial statute.<sup>46</sup> A clerk of court has no power to amend on his own motion.<sup>47</sup>

Under a statute giving the court discretionary power to amend, it may, in the furtherance of justice, amend any process by correcting mistakes therein, on such terms as it deems just.<sup>48</sup> Amendments to process are liberally granted where the rights of defendants are not prejudiced,<sup>49</sup> but ordinarily no amendment will be permitted when third persons have acquired rights which would be injuriously affected thereby.<sup>50</sup> In exercising the power to amend process, the court must consider the substantive rights of both parties and it is not authorized to further the interests of one litigant at the expense of the other.<sup>51</sup>

Time of amendment. As a general rule, the power to amend process may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings.<sup>52</sup> The amendment may be made nunc pro tunc at a term subsequent to that at which the order allowing it is made,<sup>53</sup> or even after judgment,<sup>54</sup> but not after the case is out of court.<sup>55</sup> Authority to allow an amendment after an appeal or proceedings in error have been perfected is considered in Appeal and Error § 617.

b. Process Amendable

In the absence of any statutory restriction denying the court power to allow the particular amendment sought, process that is merely voidable is amendable; but process that is void cannot be amended.

In the absence of any statutory restriction denying the court power to allow the particular amendment sought, process that is merely voidable is amendable.<sup>56</sup> However, inasmuch as there must be something to amend or amend by,<sup>57</sup> it follows that void process which must be considered as no process at all<sup>58</sup> cannot be amended.<sup>59</sup> Where the complaint setting out the cause of action is attached to the summons, there is something to amend by, and the summons is clearly amendable.<sup>60</sup> Original writs are amendable as well as any other process under a statute authorizing the court to amend

Jurisdictional defect

If process served on defendant was jurisdictionally defective, it could not be corrected by the court by amendment even under broad and liberal language of the provision of statute authorizing mistake, omission, irregularity or defect to be corrected or supplied, in discretion of the court.—Rockefeller v. Hein, 28 N.Y.S.2d 268, 176 Misc. 659.

60. N.J.—Kostrob v. Riley, 143 A. 883, 105 N.J.Law 37. 50 C.J. p 601 note 32.

"any process,"<sup>61</sup> or under a statute of jeofails providing that the several courts shall proceed and render judgment according to the right of the case, notwithstanding any defect or want of form in the writ, process, or other pleading.<sup>62</sup> The power of the court to amend extends to affidavits and orders for service of process by publication, as discussed infra § 118.

c. Procedure

Generally, leave of court to amend process must be obtained in the court from which the writ issues, and the motion to amend should be made promptly after discovery of the defect. Notice of an application to amend process should usually be given to the other party.

Except where the statute permits an amendment as of course, leave of court to amend process must be obtained.<sup>63</sup> A leave to amend process may not be implied from a leave to amend a return.<sup>64</sup> In a proper case, the court may order an amendment of the process of its own motion in order to correct its records to conform to the facts.<sup>65</sup> The issue presented on a motion to amend summons on the ground of mistake in inserting the name of the wrong court is a question of fact for the court, and in order to aid in determining the issue the court may have recourse to the complaint.<sup>66</sup>

Time and place of application. The motion to amend should be made promptly after discovery of the defect;<sup>67</sup> and the court may refuse to allow an amendment on the ground of delay in moving therefor.<sup>68</sup> Since amendments of process ordinarily are permissible only in the court from which the process issues,<sup>69</sup> the motion should be made in the court from which the writ issues,<sup>70</sup> although the appellate court, after taking jurisdiction of a cause, will sometimes amend the process;<sup>71</sup> but there is also authority to the effect that a motion to amend cannot be made for the first time on appeal.<sup>72</sup>

Notice of application. It is generally held that notice of an application to amend process should be given to the other party,<sup>73</sup> at least in the case of an amendment sought after the term at which the judgment is rendered,<sup>74</sup> although some cases have broadly held that such notice is not necessary.<sup>75</sup> Where notice is required, an order allowing an amendment without notice cannot be confirmed nunc pro tunc.<sup>76</sup> Unless a statute or rule of court requires it, no notice is necessary where the rights of the parties and the issues to be tried are not affected,<sup>77</sup> as in the case of an ex parte application to correct the name of plaintiff,<sup>78</sup> or where it appears that defendant was in fact apprised thereof,<sup>79</sup> or is in court attacking the sufficiency of the process.<sup>80</sup>

Necessity of actual amendment. The amendment need not always be actually made, for, if the defect is amendable, the writ may be deemed amended whenever the objection is taken;<sup>81</sup> and this rule is frequently resorted to on appeal,<sup>82</sup> unless it appears that no notice of motion to amend was given defendant.<sup>83</sup> So, where process is defective with respect to the term at which it is returnable, an order of court making the case returnable to a named subsequent term and requiring an answer at such term is substantially equivalent to an amendment to the process and constitutes sufficient notice to defendant to appear and answer at the term designated in the order, without a formal amendment of process.<sup>84</sup> When a summons is amended by making a new party, the better practice is to insert the amendment in the original summons; but there is a substantial amendment

An amendment of process will ordinarily be deemed to relate back to the time of the commencement of the suit, validating all acts done under the process.

An amendment of process will ordinarily be deemed to relate back to the time of the commencement of the suit,<sup>86</sup> validating all acts done under the process,<sup>87</sup> although, where the amendment changes the cause of action or brings in new parties, it is effective only from the date it was granted.<sup>88</sup> Where the defect is in respect of a matter which, by some statutory or other provision, is made a condition precedent to the maintenance of the suit, the nonobservance is fatal, and the doctrine of relation back does not apply, with respect to the operation of the statute of limitations.<sup>89</sup>

As often as a writ is amended it is open to attack for defects and errors,<sup>90</sup> but not as to prior defects which have been corrected.<sup>91</sup> If defendant has already answered the complaint, a second service after amendment of process is not necessary,<sup>92</sup> especially where any injustice due to unpreparedness for trial caused by the amendment could be obviated by the allowance of more time to prepare.<sup>93</sup>

a. In General

Formal defects and clerical errors in process are amendable, but defects of substance are not amendable unless the statute relating to amendment of process authorizes it.

Existence of real plaintiff

Substantial compliance

Process which is defective because not in the exact form required by statute, but which is in substantial compliance therewith, is "voidable process" and may be amended.—Howe v. Lisbon Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 14 A.2d 3, 111 Vt. 201.

Sufficient notice

Defects in the form of process do not render it void, but only irregular and amendable, where such defective process is sufficient to advise defendant of the nature of the case, the court in which it is filed, and his interest therein.—Texas Title Guaranty Co. v. Mardis, 98 P.2d 593, 186 Okl. 433.

Unimportant and unessential variations from the prescribed form of notice of commencement of action not affecting the substantial rights of defendant are irregularities which may be cured by amendment pursuant to the general authority of the court to amend a process, pleading, or other proceeding in furtherance of justice.—Mishkind-Feinberg Realty Co. v. Process which is not in substantial compliance with statutory requirements is "void process," although not prohibited by law, and such process is not amendable.—Howe v. Lisbon Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 14 A.2d 3, 111 Vt. 201.

Acquisition of jurisdiction

Where jurisdiction of a nonresident defendant is acquired by service of summons on secretary of state as its attorney and by mailing of summons alone, failure to mail complaint with summons as required by statute may be treated as an irregularity and may be corrected, but, where jurisdiction of defendant is not thus acquired, court may not correct any defect in proceedings by which it was attempted to obtain jurisdiction.—Stewart v. Transcontinental Car Forwarding Co. of Ak-statute relating to amendment of process authorizes it.<sup>97</sup>

Variance. A variance between a summons and declaration or complaint,<sup>3</sup> or between an original summons and a branch summons against a joint defendant residing in another county than that in which suit is instituted,<sup>4</sup> or between an original summons and copy,<sup>5</sup> may be corrected by amendment. A fortiori, if the language of the petition and that of the process are equivocal, and a variance exists or does not, according to the construction given, an amendment will be allowed to remove the equivocal features.<sup>6</sup> If an amendment of the complaint is allowed, process is also amendable to conform thereto.<sup>7</sup>

b. Contents of Writ Generally

Process may be amended, with respect to its contents, to add words required by statute which have been omitted, to change the words to conform to statutory requirements, and to strike out surplusage; and, when the writ is not directed to any officer, or to the wrong officer, it may be amended.

With respect to its contents, process may be amended to add words required by statute which have been omitted,<sup>8</sup> to change the words to conform to statutory requirements,<sup>9</sup> to correct a mistake in the name of the county in which the process was issued,<sup>10</sup> to strike out surplusage,<sup>11</sup> or to substitute a successor in office as indorser on the writ.<sup>12</sup> Process may be amended to correct or supply a date therein or in the indorsement thereon, if omitted or wrongly given,<sup>13</sup> except in jurisdictions where the statute is construed as invalidating process for not complying with its terms in this respect.<sup>14</sup> It also may be amended when it fails to state or to state correctly, when and where the complaint will be filed,<sup>15</sup> or when it fails to show the authority for serving the attorney of the party instead of the party himself.<sup>16</sup>

Direction to officer. When the writ is not directed to any officer,<sup>17</sup> or to the wrong officer,<sup>18</sup> it may be amended. If the sheriff cannot serve the writ and for that reason it is directed to another officer, a failure to recite the facts making such direction necessary may be cured by amendment.<sup>19</sup>

c. Designation of Court and Place of Trial

Process may be amended to add the name, or to make a correction in the name, of the court in which the action was brought, and to designate the county in which plaintiff desires trial; but a court sitting for a county to which a writ on its face is not returnable is without authority to allow an amendment of the writ making it returnable to it.

Process may be amended to add the name,<sup>20</sup>

or to make a correction in the name,<sup>21</sup> of the court in which the action was brought. An amendment may also be made to designate the county in which plaintiff desires trial,<sup>22</sup> and to correct the name of the county seat of the county at which the court sits.<sup>23</sup> However, a court sitting for a county to which a writ of summons on its face is not returnable is without authority to allow an amendment of the writ making the writ returnable to it.<sup>24</sup>

d. Names and Addresses of Parties and Attorneys

Generally, an amendment may be allowed to correct the names and addresses of a party plaintiff or defendant or of an attorney, or to add or change matter of description of a party whose name already appears in the writ; but, except under some statutes, an amendment changing or substituting parties and thus materially altering the writ will not ordinarily be permitted.

As a general rule, an amendment may be allowed to correct the name of a party plaintiff or defendant,<sup>25</sup> or to add an indorsement of the name of the person for whose use the action was brought,<sup>26</sup> or to substitute for the equitable owner's name the name of the legal owner for the use of the equitable owner,<sup>27</sup> unless it involves an adjudication on the rights of a third person not before the court and without its jurisdiction.<sup>28</sup> Matter of description of a party whose name already appears in the writ may be added or changed by amendment.<sup>29</sup> If the mistake is made by the clerk in taking the name from a memorandum or præcipe filed with him, the writ may be amended from such memorandum or præcipe.<sup>30</sup>

The rule authorizing the correction of error by amendment where the right party is sued in the wrong name does not, however, apply where the right party is not before the court.<sup>31</sup> Further, it is held that an amendment in names of parties which would materially alter the writ will not be allowed, as, for example, to substitute another's name for that of the sole party plaintiff,<sup>32</sup> or sole party de-

Dismissal barring action

Where summons served on defendant erroneously specified the county court instead of district court as the court in which action was brought, but the complaint served with the summons showed that action was brought in district court and was for an amount beyond jurisdiction of the county court, the action was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the district court, and, where a dismissal would bar action under statute of limitations, district court erred in refusing to permit amendment of summons to show that action was brought in district court.—James River Nat. #### Intention held immaterial

In determining whether superior court sitting for a county to which writ of summons on its face was not returnable had jurisdiction to allow an amendment of the writ making it returnable to that county, plaintiff's intention in issuing writ, and whether defendant's counsel must have known of such intention by reason of his correspondence with plaintiff's counsel and receipt of a copy of plaintiff's declaration, were immaterial.—Sheldon v. Westcott, supra.

"Interlocutory matter"

Where a summons was against an individual, trading as a named company, "a New Jersey corporation," amendment thereof by striking out the quoted words in order to conform to the complaint and properly to describe defendant already in court was an "interlocutory matter" within the court rule conferring authority on a circuit court judge sitting as a supreme court commissioner.—Lord's Cut Flower Co. v. defendant,<sup>33</sup> or to add a party plaintiff's<sup>34</sup> or defendant's<sup>35</sup> name to a writ which had none, or to add the name of a defendant to the names already there.<sup>36</sup>

It has been broadly stated, however, that the court may, in the furtherance of justice, amend any process by adding or striking out the name of any party,<sup>37</sup> and, under some statutes, the name of a party entirely omitted from the summons may be supplied,<sup>38</sup> as under a provision authorizing the court by amendment to correct a mistake in the name of a party, "or a mistake in any other respect."<sup>39</sup> It has also been held that, where no one is harmed thereby, the heirs of a deceased party defendant may be added by amendment,<sup>40</sup> or a father's name as defendant substituted for that of the son.<sup>41</sup> If a defendant accepts service on a summons in blank, the blank may be filled in later by amendment.<sup>42</sup> Also a writ may be amendable by striking out the name of a joint party.<sup>43</sup>

Capacity of party. An amendment specifying or altering the capacity in which plaintiff sues,<sup>44</sup> or the capacity in which defendant is sued,<sup>45</sup> may be allowed, but not when the new description would change a civil action into a criminal prosecution.<sup>46</sup>

Addresses of parties. Ordinarily an amendment may be allowed to correct an error in plaintiff's address,<sup>47</sup> or to state the residence of defendant.<sup>48</sup>

Names and addresses of attorneys. A summons may be amended when it fails to give the address of plaintiff's attorney,<sup>49</sup> or by substituting the in-

Corporation for company

(1) Where summons was directed to company which had long since ceased to exist, and service was on an employee of a different corporation which did not operate the property of the company named in the summons, at least openly, until nearly two years after the injury to plaintiff, plaintiff was not entitled to have the process amended by substituting the name of such corporation in lieu of the company.—State ex rel. General Mills v. Waltner, 156 S.W.2d 664, 348 Mo. 852.

(2) In action for injuries sustained in operation of truck owned by corporation plaintiff's motion to amend summons and complaint by striking out words "H. Pearlman, trading as Pearlman's Railroad Salvage Company," and substituting the words "Pearlman's Railroad Salvage Company, Inc." was properly denied, since plaintiff sought to add by substitution as a party defendant the corporation which had never been served with summons.—Hogsed v. Pearlman, 195 S.E. 789, 213 N.C. 240.

Corporation for individual

Where action was brought against individual, allowance of amendment of summons by substituting name of corporation of which individual defendant was president and rendering judgment against corporation without service of process on it was held unauthorized.—Derek v. Elder, 249 N.W. 724, 68 N.D. 635.

Where there was a complete absence of name of defendant in summons but some one other than person who prepared summons filled in on back of printed form the name of a party, which, although similar to that of defendant, was not spelled same way and contained no initial, summons was jurisdictionally defective and could not be corrected by amendment, even though there was no doubt that party served was defendant intended and was party appearing specially to vacate summons.—Rockefeller v. Hein, 28 N.Y.S.2d 266, 176 Misc. 659.

Liberal construction of statute

The statute providing that the court may, either before or after judgment, in furtherance of justice amend its pleading or process by adding or striking out the name of any party should be liberally construed.—Boykin v. Capehart, 31 S.E.2d 506, 205 S.C. 276.

Addition of plaintiff

Where action on an existing cause of action had been seasonably commenced against defendant, who was served with process, but writ failed to name any plaintiff, following the allowance of amendment by inserting name of plaintiff, after proper notice to defendant, plaintiff must be taken to be the one by whom as plaintiff the action was intended to be brought.—Ideal Financing Ass'n v. McPhail, supra.

Defendant named in complaint

Where the name of one defendant was inadvertently omitted from the title of the action in the summons, but appeared in the title of the action in the complaint attached to and personally served on that defendant with the summons, and the complaint stated a cause of action against him by name, the court properly amended the summons on plaintiff's motion, so as to conform to the complaint, notwithstanding defendant made a special appearance to vacate the service of summons.—Griffin v. #### e. Form or Cause of Action

A writ may be amended by designating the form of action, or by stating the nature of the cause of action; but a change in the form or cause of action cannot be made where it would prejudice defendant, unless it is done with the consent of the parties.

A writ may be amended by designating the form of action,<sup>51</sup> or by stating the nature of the cause of action.<sup>52</sup> A change in the form or cause of action cannot be made, however, where it would prejudice defendant,<sup>53</sup> unless it is done with the consent of the parties,<sup>54</sup> or after appearance of defendant and without prejudice to his rights.<sup>55</sup> The writ may be amended by changing the indorsement thereon so as to add other counts to the declaration.<sup>56</sup> The alteration of the form of a writ in an effort to make it serve as the commencement of several different causes of action is in effect an attempt to change a substantial provision of the statute governing the issuance of writs and is not a mere irregularity in form which may be remedied by amendment.<sup>57</sup>

f. Relief and Amount of Damages

A writ may be amended by stating the nature of the relief demanded, or by stating, or by reducing or increasing, the amount of damages asked for.

A writ may be amended by stating the nature of the relief demanded,<sup>58</sup> or by stating,<sup>59</sup> or by reducing<sup>60</sup> or increasing,<sup>61</sup> the amount of damages asked for. The amount may be increased, even though in the writ's amended form it could not have been served by the officer who served the original writ,<sup>62</sup>

or been made returnable to the court to which the original writ was returnable.<sup>63</sup> It has been held, however, that, in an action where the jurisdiction of the court depended on the amount of damages claimed, the omission from the writ of any amount claimed affected the jurisdiction of the court and precluded it from assuming jurisdiction even for the purpose of amending the writ.<sup>64</sup>

g. Directions for Return or Appearance

Writs held void because they violate some mandatory provision of law relating to directions therein as to the return of the process are not amendable, and a writ returnable to a court without jurisdiction of the petition is likewise not amendable; but defects in the directions for return and answering, not affecting the validity of the writ, may be amended in the discretion of the court in the absence of any showing of injustice or prejudice resulting therefrom.

Under the rule that void process is not amendable, as discussed supra § 114 b, writs held void because they violate some mandatory provision of law relating to directions therein as to the return of the process are not amendable.<sup>65</sup> A writ returnable to a court without jurisdiction of the petition is void and not amendable.<sup>66</sup> However, under the rule that formal defects are amendable, where the writ is tested in the name of the judge of the court having jurisdiction,<sup>67</sup> or a copy of the complaint giving the correct information is served with the summons,<sup>68</sup> an error in the description of the court may be amended, where it appears that defendant has not been misled thereby.

Other defects in the directions for return and answering, not affecting the validity of the writ, may be amended in the discretion of the court in the absence of any showing of injustice or prejudice resulting therefrom.<sup>69</sup> So, where defendant appeared at the legal time of holding the court and at which the process ought to have required him to appear,<sup>70</sup> or if, failing to appear, it is shown that he has received notice by service of the writ,<sup>71</sup> or by the terms of his bond in the case of bail,<sup>72</sup> or if he has filed his answer,<sup>73</sup> there is no prejudice to defendant's right, and the writ is amendable. Where it appears that some of the defendants have appeared and others have not, the directions for return may be amended if reservice on defendants who have not appeared is provided for.<sup>74</sup>

If a writ is made returnable at the wrong place,<sup>75</sup> or if it fails to name the place,<sup>76</sup> it is amendable, when it appears that defendant has not been prejudiced. If, however, defendant has had no notice of the suit and does not appear, the amendment should be refused.<sup>77</sup> If the return day is properly given, an amendment may be allowed changing it to the next term, when the amendment would be in furtherance of justice.<sup>78</sup> Also an indefinite designation of the return day may be made definite by amendment.<sup>79</sup>

h. Style, Date, Teste, Signature, and Seal

Process may be amended when it does not have the style required by law or when there is an omission or defect with respect to the date, teste, signature, or

Process may be amended when it does not have the style required by law,<sup>81</sup> as where it omits the name of the state in which the process was issued;<sup>82</sup> and it has been held that an amendment may be allowed to cure a defect arising from the nonobservance of a constitutional direction as well as of a statutory one.<sup>83</sup>

Date. Process may be amended when the date of its issuance is omitted or incorrectly stated.<sup>84</sup> There is no error in allowing an amendment as to the date of the writ if such allowance is made to have the record conform to the truth, even though, by reason of such amendment, plaintiff is thereby enabled to show that his action is not barred by limitations;<sup>85</sup> but this rule is subject to the limitation that an amendment which would substitute for the date of the writ a date which would bring the action within the period of limitation may be allowed only for the purpose of making the record conform to the truth and not merely to avoid the running of the statute of limitations.<sup>86</sup>

Seal. Process may be amended when the seal of the court is omitted,<sup>87</sup> unless it otherwise appears to be wholly void.<sup>88</sup> In jurisdictions holding that a writ without seal is no writ at all, the seal cannot be added by amendment.<sup>89</sup>

Signature or teste. A summons may be amended when there is an omission of, or defect in, the signature or teste,<sup>90</sup> but not in jurisdictions where such

§ 116. Amendment of Return

- a. In general
- b. By whom amendable
- c. Time of making amendment
- d. Jurisdiction to authorize; discretion
- e. Procedure
- f. Operation and effect

a. In General

A return or affidavit of service of process, or proof of service by publication, may, as a general rule, be amended to remedy defects therein or to make it conform to the truth, and to the statutory requirements, where such exist; but a proposed amendment will not be allowed if it states an untruth or where prejudice to rights that have accrued meanwhile will result from the amendment.

An officer's return of service of process may, as a general rule, be amended to remedy defects therein or to make it conform to the truth, and to the statutory requirements, where such exist.<sup>92</sup> The right to amend is a common-law right in no way dependent on statute,<sup>93</sup> although frequently expressly declared by statute.<sup>94</sup> Equally amendable are affidavits of service made by private persons,<sup>95</sup> proofs of service by publication,<sup>96</sup> affidavits of service on nonresidents by nonresident officers,<sup>97</sup> and acknowledgments of service.<sup>98</sup>

A proposed amendment will not be allowed if it states an untruth, or is in direct conflict with the facts.<sup>99</sup> Where prejudice to rights that have ac-ture before completing his return, the superior court had discretion to allow a pretrial amendment by affixing the clerk's signature.—North Carolina Joint Stock Land Bank of Durham v. Aycock, 28 S.E.2d 494, 223 N.C. 837.

Termination of office

Where court's seal on a writ was duly authenticated by an authorized clerk at time of its issue to an attorney, fact that at time writ was dated, signing clerk had ceased to hold office did not make the writ void, but constituted a technical misnomer or irregularity, and writ could be in the discretion of the trial court be amended by striking out signature of clerk appearing thereon and writing in place thereof name of clerk's successor in office.—Burger v. Brindie, 10 A.2d 353, 64 R.I. 86.

Purpose

A return of service of process which fails to show the necessary jurisdictional facts, although such facts exist, may be amended so as to conform to the truth, not for the purpose of validating a void judgment, but to show that a judgment never was void.—State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court of Seventeenth Judicial Dist., 80 P.2d 367, 107 Mont. 97.

Amendment held not effected

Where, after judgment, the clerk changed the record to indicate that summons was returnable to an earlier term than the actual return term, the court, in ordering the records corrected to conform to the true facts, did not amend the sheriff's return, but merely restored a record that had been the subject of spoliation.—Henneke v. Strack, Mo.App., 101 S.W.2d 743.

94. Tex.—Employer's Reinsurance Corporation v. Brock, Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 435, error dismissed.

The intent of the statute providing that court may allow any process, return, or proof of service to be amended is to authorize the court to "allow" an amendment to a sheriff's return on the motion of the sheriff, or of a party so as to cure an "insufficiency," and thus avoid unnecessary delay.—Anthony v. crued meanwhile will result from the amendment, it should not be permitted,<sup>1</sup> as where the effect of the amendment, if allowed, would be to avoid a judgment, to render it erroneous, or subject it to reversal,<sup>2</sup> or to nullify an appeal taken from a judgment which is void unless supported by the amended return,<sup>3</sup> or to make a judgment in an earlier suit, in which the return was made, admissible in a later suit against a defendant who was not a party to the earlier suit.<sup>4</sup> Amendments to a return so as to show diligent search for defendant, inability to find him, and return of the writ to the attorney without service will not be allowed merely to avoid the running of the statute of limitations,<sup>5</sup> but there is no error in allowing such amendments to have the record conform to the truth, even though, by reason of such amendments, plaintiff is thereby enabled to show that his action is not barred by limitations.<sup>6</sup>

Right to compel amendment. If the return is, on its face, defective, the sheriff may be compelled to correct it;<sup>7</sup> but he cannot be compelled to revise, alter, or contradict a return which is complete in form and conforms to the law, the only remedy in such a case being an action against the officer for a false return.<sup>8</sup>

The return can be amended only by the person actually serving the process, whether an officer or private individual; but, under a statute restricting proof of service to the single method of proof by an officer of the court, an individual or officer of a court in a foreign state cannot be allowed to amend his return.

The return can be amended only by the person actually serving the process, whether an officer<sup>9</sup> or private individual,<sup>10</sup> or officer acting as an individual when disqualified to act as an officer.<sup>11</sup> However, under a statute restricting proof of service to the single method of proof by an officer of the court, an individual<sup>12</sup> or an officer of a court in a foreign state<sup>13</sup> cannot be allowed to amend his return.

Even where the statute provides for proof of service of process in a foreign state by an officer thereof, an officer of a foreign state cannot amend his return after he has ceased to act as officer.<sup>14</sup> It has been held that an ex-sheriff cannot amend a return of a service made by his deputy during his term of office,<sup>15</sup> unless the deputy joins in, and swears to, the petition to amend;<sup>16</sup> but, if the deputy joins, the amendment may be allowed,<sup>17</sup> and the fact that the order in terms permits the ex-sheriff, rather than the deputy, to amend is immaterial.<sup>18</sup>

c. Time of Making Amendment

Generally, an amendment may be allowed at any time, and at any stage of the proceedings; and it may be made after the lapse of years, or after the officer who made the return has gone out of office.

As a general rule, an amendment may be allowed at any time, and at any stage of the proceedings.<sup>19</sup> Thus the amendment may be made after discharge of the jury,<sup>20</sup> or even after judgment or decree.<sup>21</sup>

It may be made after the lapse of years,<sup>22</sup> on testimony showing the propriety of so doing,<sup>23</sup> or after the officer, who made the return, has gone out of office.<sup>24</sup> An amendment to show service on the principal defendant may be made after amendment of the petition substituting the agent as defendant.<sup>25</sup>

After action for false or insufficient return. An amendment by the sheriff of his return may be made after action is brought against him for a false or insufficient return, if the officer has in fact performed his duty and the amendment is sought to make his return conform to the fact,<sup>26</sup> although there is some authority to the contrary;<sup>27</sup> but, even where the contrary view is held, a sheriff may amend his return at any time after receiving notice of the motion against him for a false return up to the time when the motion is actually made.<sup>28</sup> Where the making of a false return is itself a violation of the officer's duty for which the officer is liable, an amendment by the sheriff designed to relieve himself of that liability cannot be made after action against him has been commenced,<sup>29</sup> especially where the return as made had been the basis of judicial action in another proceeding at

d. Jurisdiction to Authorize; Discretion

Only the court to which the return is made has jurisdiction to authorize an amendment of it, and the application is addressed to its discretion.

Only the court to which the return is made has jurisdiction to authorize an amendment of it.<sup>31</sup> The supreme court to which the case has been transferred on appeal,<sup>32</sup> or a federal court to which it has been removed from a state court on petition,<sup>33</sup> cannot authorize the amendment. However, the power to allow amendment of a sheriff's return belongs to a referee to whom the case has been referred.<sup>34</sup>

appears that there has been no abuse of discretion.<sup>39</sup>

e. Procedure

Generally, it is necessary to secure leave from the court to amend the return. The leave to amend, when granted, is not the equivalent of amendment, and the officer must act on the court's order.

While it has been held that a motion to permit an officer to amend and the officer's offer to do so is the equivalent of amendment even though the court did not grant permission,<sup>40</sup> and that the court has the right to accept an amended return of process, even though the court's consent to the amendment was not first secured,<sup>41</sup> the general rule is that leave to amend must first be secured from the court.<sup>42</sup> A defective return cannot be cured by affidavit without leave.<sup>43</sup>

The leave can be had on application of one of the parties,<sup>44</sup> as by motion informally made;<sup>45</sup> but a bill in equity to amend a return of service by publication will not lie during the statutory period allowed for correcting the process at law.<sup>46</sup> The officer who alone can make, or be compelled to make, the amendment has been held to be a necessary party to any proceedings had for the purpose;<sup>47</sup> but it has also been held that, where application to amend the officer's return was made by a party to an action to which the officer was not a party; service of notice of such application on the officer, although proper, was not necessary.<sup>48</sup> On the application or motion, it must be shown by satisfactory evidence that the case is a proper one for an amendment,<sup>49</sup> and that, as a matter of fact, the service was properly made.<sup>50</sup> Defendant may contest the truth of the facts sought to be so introduced into the return.<sup>51</sup>

Notice to other party. Although it has been broadly held that notice to the parties interested, of an application to amend a return, is required,<sup>52</sup> some cases hold that no such notice need be given, in the absence of any showing of injustice,<sup>53</sup> even though application is made after the trial term.<sup>54</sup> In other cases this rule making notice unnecessary is restricted to an application made in the trial term,<sup>55</sup> notice being necessary if the application is made after the term at which the cause is determined.<sup>56</sup> A sheriff's amendment of his return without notice after the case has been submitted to the appellate court,<sup>57</sup> or where the rights of third persons may be adversely affected,<sup>58</sup> is void. It has been said that, while a sheriff may amend without notice as long as the papers are in his possession, it is better practice to give notice after the return is in court.<sup>59</sup> If defendant is already in court, notice is unnecessary.<sup>60</sup>

Effectuation of amendment. The leave to amend, when granted, is not the equivalent of amendment; the officer must act on the court's order;<sup>61</sup> but he may do so by filing an affidavit stating the facts of service,<sup>62</sup> or the filing of a stipulation of facts as to service agreed to by the parties may be considered equal to an actual amendment.<sup>63</sup>

An amendment of a return ordinarily relates back to the time of the original return, curing the defects therein; and the amendment, as allowed, is conclusive on collateral attack; but in the same action between the same parties it does not prevent a later inquiry into the validity of the amendment itself, or into the truth of its recitals.

An amendment of a return ordinarily relates back to the time of the original return, curing the defects therein.<sup>64</sup> Also, defects in the amendment may be cured by adequate recitals in the original.<sup>65</sup> It has been held, however, that an order of court authorizing amendment of a return does not relate back to, and sanction, an earlier unauthorized amendment in the absence of an expressed intention that it shall so operate.<sup>66</sup> The amendment, as allowed, is conclusive on collateral attack,<sup>67</sup> but in the same action between the same parties it does not prevent a later inquiry into the validity of the amendment itself,<sup>68</sup> or into the truth of its recitals.<sup>69</sup> It has been held, however, that the court will not inquire into the truth of an amendment made by an officer to his return, in the absence of suspicious circumstances.<sup>70</sup>

writ is ordered.<sup>74</sup> However, an action will not be dismissed after allowance of an amendment to show service on a principal as defendant, even though at the time of allowance the agent's name had been substituted as defendant.<sup>75</sup>

§ 117. — Amendable Defects.

Jurisdictional defects in a return cannot be cured by amendment, as where it is sought to add an indorsement on the writ authorizing a previously unauthorized person to serve it; but defects not affecting the jurisdiction may be amended, as by adding further specifications as to the manner of service or acts done in compliance with statute.

Jurisdictional defects in a return cannot be cured by amendment,<sup>76</sup> as where it is sought to add an indorsement on the writ authorizing a previously unauthorized person to serve it,<sup>77</sup> or where service is made by an unauthorized person and an amendment is asked for showing service by such person as deputy sheriff,<sup>78</sup> or where a declaration as substitute for process is served before being filed,<sup>79</sup> or where an affidavit of service by publication fails to state that residence of defendant was not known, as excusing failure to mail copies, and an affidavit affirmatively stating that fact is offered.<sup>80</sup> Also the court will not permit an amendment showing that a particular person was served as defendant even where there is evidence showing that he was actually served, when it also appears that he was not named as a party defendant in the case.<sup>81</sup>

Defects not affecting the jurisdiction may be amended,<sup>82</sup> as for example, by adding further specifications as to the manner of service or acts done in compliance with statute.<sup>83</sup> Accordingly, it may be proper to amend the return by adding or correcting the signature of the officer,<sup>84</sup> or by showing that he served process as a private individual,<sup>85</sup> by alleging that other acts required by the statute were done in making service,<sup>86</sup> by adding specifications of details required by the statute,<sup>87</sup> or by adding further specifications as to the copy or copies delivered.<sup>88</sup> A return may also be amended by including the names of defendants actually served,<sup>89</sup> by stating facts as to the nonresidence of one of defendants,<sup>90</sup> by stating additional facts as to the person with whom,<sup>91</sup> or the place at which,<sup>92</sup> the summons was left or served, or by showing that one of defendants, stated to have been served, was not found.<sup>93</sup>

Other defects in the return may be cured by amendments designating or correcting the date of service,<sup>94</sup> the date of mailing copies where the service is by publication,<sup>95</sup> the date of the receipt of the summons,<sup>96</sup> or the date of the return;<sup>97</sup> and an amendment may show that the deputy who made the service had been duly appointed by the sheriff,<sup>98</sup> or show that affiant who made the service was over eighteen years of age.<sup>99</sup> The erroneous indorsement of the return to the writ on a notice of summons of the jury rather than on the writ itself may be corrected by amendment.<sup>1</sup>

Return receipt for registered mail

In action against nonresident, on defendant's motion to vacate sheriff's return on summons because only copy instead of original of defendant's return receipt for registered mailing of copy of process was attached to plaintiff's declaration, plaintiff's motion to amend by filing return receipt and attaching it to declaration in place of copy was granted.—*Quillen v. #### Attestation

Since an officer of the law is presumed to have done his duty, the sheriff will be allowed to amend his return to indicate that a copy of the writ of summons which he left with defendant was "attested", where defendant does not deny that it was attested, and where the sheriff states that because of the lapse of time since the service, he cannot state definitely whether or not it was attested.—*Reihart v. ly different from defendant has been held not subject to amendment after entry of a default judgment, as involving "matter of form" the defect being a jurisdictional one.<sup>3</sup>

§ 118. Amendment of Affidavits, Orders, Etc., for Publication

Defective affidavits or orders for publication may be amended when the defect is formal merely, and a defective summons, voidable only, may be amended during the course of the publication; but, when an order is based on an insufficient showing made in the complaint or affidavit, a subsequent amendment of such complaint or affidavit cannot give life to the order, since the defect is jurisdictional.

Defective affidavits or orders for publication may be amended when the defect is formal merely,<sup>4</sup> and a defective summons, voidable only, may be amended during the course of the publication.<sup>5</sup> However, when an order is based on an insufficient showing made in the complaint or affidavit, a subsequent amendment of such complaint or affidavit cannot give life to the order, since the defect is jurisdictional.<sup>6</sup> Also a jurisdictional defect in the order cannot be cured by an alleged correction of the defect in the summons.<sup>7</sup> The failure of the affidavit to give the post-office address of a nonresident defendant is not jurisdictional, and hence amendable, where the statute does not require that the affidavit state it,<sup>8</sup> but the defect is a jurisdictional one not correctable by amendment where the statute does require it.<sup>9</sup>

Where the defect in the affidavit consists in a failure to state jurisdictional facts in express terms, it may still be amended if the jurisdictional facts exist and are stated in the affidavit inferentially;<sup>10</sup> but, where there is a total want of averment in the affidavit of some material fact required by statute, the service is void and the defect cannot be cured by amendment.<sup>11</sup> A variance between the order requiring publication in a paper named, and publication by mistake in another paper meeting the statutory requirements, may be cured by an amendment of the order nunc pro tunc to conform to the publication in fact made.<sup>12</sup> On the other hand, noncompliance of the publication with statutory requirements cannot be cured by recitals in the decree.<sup>13</sup> Personal appearance of defendant estops him from complaining thereafter of an amendment of the affidavit,<sup>14</sup> or of the addition of his name as party defendant after publication had been made.<sup>15</sup>

V. ABUSE OF PROCESS

§ 119. Definitions and Distinctions

- a. Abuse of process
- b. Malicious use of process

a. Abuse of Process

An abuse or malicious abuse of process is its willful or malicious use to obtain a result which the process was not intended by law to effect.

Typographical error

Where service by publication was made on nonresident giving her correct home address, but by a typographical error newspaper advertisement and certificate of mailing stated defendant's middle initial to be "B" instead of "E," such publication could be declared complete and effectual under statute authorizing court in furtherance of justice to amend any process by correcting

Stated otherwise

(1) Generally, "malicious use of legal process" implies ulterior motive in procuring issuance of writ, while "malicious abuse of legal process" involves improper use of writ after its issuance.—Carl v. Hansbury, 21 S.E.2d 802, 67 Ga.App. 830.

(2) "Malicious use of civil proc-

Malicious use of process. The fundamental distinction between malicious use and malicious abuse of process is that the first is an employment of process for its ostensible purpose, although without probable cause, whereas the second is employment of process for a purpose not contemplated by law.<sup>19</sup> Another distinction is that, in case of malicious use, it must be shown that the action in which the process was used has terminated favorably to plaintiff in the suit at bar, whereas this is unnecessary in an action for malicious abuse.<sup>20</sup> ess" has to do with wrongful initiation of such process, while "abuse of civil process" is concerned with perversion of such process after it is issued.—Publix Drug Co. v. Breyer Ice Cream Co., 32 A.2d 413, 347 Pa. 346.

(3) Action for abuse of process lies for improper, unwarranted, and perverted use of process after it has been issued, while action for malicious use of process lies for causing process to issue maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause.—Ash v. Cohn, 194 A. 174, 119 N.J.Law 54.

(4) A party who employs process for some unlawful object, not the purpose for which it is intended, is guilty of "abuse of process," while a party who employs civil or criminal process maliciously, but with no object other than its proper effect and execution, is guilty of "malicious use of process."—Johnson v. Land Title Bank & Trust Co., 198 A. 23, 329 Pa. 241.

An action in trespass for maliciously causing judgments to be entered by confession on judgment notes was for "malicious use of civil process" and not for "abuse of process."—Publix Drug Co. v. Breyer Ice Cream Co., 32 A.2d 413, 347 Pa. 346.

Attachment execution

Complaint was for "malicious use of legal process" rather than "malicious abuse of legal process," where process employed was attachment execution to enforce payment of money judgment, since such was the very purpose for which attachment execution was designed.—Fenton Storage Co. v. Feinstein, 195 A. 176, 129 Pa.Super. 125.

Foreclosure of bill of sale

20. Ga.—Price v. Fidelity Trust Co., 41 S.E.2d 614, 74 Ga.App. 836—Defnall v. Schoen, 35 S.E.2d 564, 73 Ga.App. 25.

Although actions for malicious arrest and for malicious abuse of process differ in some particulars,<sup>21</sup> both are protective of an individual's interest in freedom from confinement, whether such confinement is physically of the person or a limitation of one's personal freedom, as in holding a person to bail, and it is immaterial whether the act of defendant directly or indirectly causes the confinement.<sup>22</sup>

Malicious arrest has been distinguished from abuse of process on the ground that, in the former action termination of the proceeding in which the arrest was made must be shown, whereas in the latter it is not necessary to show termination of the proceeding in which the process was abused.<sup>23</sup>

b. Malicious Use of Process

Malicious use of process is the employment of process for its legitimate purpose, but maliciously and without probable cause.

Malicious use of process is the employment of process for its legitimate purpose, but maliciously and without probable cause.<sup>24</sup> The gravamen of the wrong is the malice and want of probable cause.<sup>25</sup> As discussed in Malicious Prosecution § 2, an action for malicious use of process is similar to one for malicious prosecution, but the nature of the wrong is distinct.

b. Abuse of process

c. Malicious use of process

a. In General

It has been held that at common law, whenever an injury results from the issuance of judicial process in civil actions, the person procuring its issuance incurs no responsibility, provided he acts in honest conviction that the remedy is necessary to the enforcement of a legal right.

It has been held that at common law, whenever an injury results from the issuance of judicial process in civil actions, the person procuring its issuance incurs no responsibility, provided he acts in honest conviction that the remedy is necessary to the enforcement of a legal right.<sup>26</sup> As discussed in Actions § 15 b (4), the costs, expenses, or other damage incident to the prosecution or defense of an action is generally damnum absque injuria, for which no remedy exists, unless there are present malice and want of probable cause.

b. Abuse of Process

(1) In general

(2) Particular elements

(1) In General

Briefly stated, the elements of the tort of abuse of process are an ulterior purpose, an act constituting misapplication of the process, and resulting damage.

It has been stated that the elements vital to an action for abuse of process are not clearly defined.<sup>27</sup> Briefly stated, the elements of the tort are a willful intent, or ulterior, or wrongful purpose, and an act constituting misapplication of the process.<sup>28</sup>

In addition, there must be damage to plaintiff from such misapplication of process.<sup>29</sup> A wrongful purpose may be inferred from acts constituting misapplication of the process,<sup>30</sup> but misapplication will not be inferred from a wrongful purpose.<sup>31</sup>

(2) Particular Elements

- (a) Use of process
- (b) Intent
- (c) Validity of process
- (d) Want of probable cause
- (e) Termination of process or proceeding

(a) Use of Process

aa. Necessity

bb. Wrongful use

aa. Necessity

The actual use of a process after its issuance is an essential element of an action for abuse of process.

An action for the abuse of process does not lie for maliciously causing process to issue.<sup>32</sup> Furthermore, there can be no abuse of process without use thereof, and if the process is not used at all no action can lie for its abuse.<sup>33</sup> Abuse of process is not shown by the mere institution of legal<sup>34</sup> or equitable<sup>35</sup> proceedings.

Interference with person or property. As a general rule, in order that action for abuse of process may lie, there must have been an unlawful interference with plaintiff's person or property under color of process,<sup>36</sup> but this rule has been held not to apply where the action is based on the unlawful institution and prosecution of a lunacy proceeding.<sup>37</sup>

Purpose not accomplished

Arrest and incarceration of defendant in bail trover process for purpose of collecting debt by forcing defendant to give up government checks payable to defendant, amounts due on which could not be reached by any process, were held not malicious abuse of process, where it did not appear that defendant actually gave up any of checks.—*Powell v. #### Test

The test as to whether there has been an "abuse of process" is whether the process has been used to accomplish some end which is without the regular purview of the process or which compels the party against whom it is used to do some collateral thing which he could not

tion,<sup>43</sup> or used to accomplish a collateral purpose not contemplated by law,<sup>44</sup> or where a party is fraudulently induced to come within the jurisdiction of the court so as to render him or his property subject to its process;<sup>45</sup> or, in the case of criminal process, where the process is executed in an oppressive and unlawful manner,<sup>46</sup> or where it is used unlawfully to coerce plaintiff,<sup>47</sup> such, for instance, as coercing him to pay a private debt.<sup>48</sup>

However, mere arrest and detention under a lawful warrant, without any act amounting to misuse or oppression, are not an abuse of process.<sup>49</sup>

A legal and legitimate use of process, to effect the result which such process is designed by law to accomplish, is not an abuse thereof.<sup>50</sup> Regular use of process cannot constitute abuse, even though the user was actuated by a wrongful motive,<sup>51</sup> pur-

Third party order

In action predicated on alleged malicious interference by defendant with plaintiff's bank account by means of a third-party order containing a stay directed against bank, recovery could not be had based on theory that there was an abuse of process, since order was used for purpose for which it was issued.—Polo v. pose,<sup>52</sup> or intent,<sup>53</sup> or by malice.<sup>54</sup>

In accordance with the foregoing rules it has been held that relief will not be given for a regular use of process to collect a debt,<sup>55</sup> to evict a tenant<sup>56</sup> or to arrest a person under civil<sup>57</sup> or criminal<sup>58</sup> warrant. Abuse of process is not shown by the authorized filing of a lien,<sup>59</sup> or by actual<sup>60</sup> or threatened<sup>61</sup> levy in accordance with regular procedure, or by a receiver's taking possession of property under proper equitable proceedings.<sup>62</sup> However, the bringing and prosecution of supplementary proceedings by a judgment creditor, who knows that the debt has been fully satisfied, for the purpose of compelling the debtor to pay again has been held to constitute an abuse of legal process.<sup>63</sup>

(b) Intent

The abuse of process, in order to be actionable, must have been willful and for a wrongful purpose. There is said to be a conflict of the authorities on the question of whether malice is an essential element of an action for abuse of process.

In order to be remediable the abuse of process must have been willful<sup>64</sup> and for an unlawful purpose,<sup>65</sup> and, as discussed infra § 123, good faith constitutes a defense.

While the element of malice is inherent in some definitions,<sup>66</sup> and the action is often denominated one for the "malicious abuse of process,"<sup>67</sup> it has been said that the authorities are in conflict as to whether malice is an essential element of abuse of process,<sup>68</sup> some authorities stating broadly that malice is essential,<sup>69</sup> and others denying that malice must be shown.<sup>70</sup> However, some authorities have held that while malice is never essential in connection with the issuance of the process,<sup>71</sup> it may be essential in connection with the use of the process.<sup>72</sup>

Malice need not be independently proved, but may be legally inferred from a willful perversion of process with a wrongful purpose,<sup>73</sup> although it cannot be inferred from a mere mistake.<sup>74</sup> Where, however, the circumstances afford no inference of malice, it has been held that actual malice must be proved.<sup>75</sup>

(c) Validity of Process

Validity of the process is no defense to an action for abuse of process.

Since an action for abuse of process presupposes an originally valid and regular process, duly and properly issued,<sup>76</sup> the validity of the process is no defense to an action for its abuse,<sup>77</sup> and plaintiff in the suit for abuse cannot support his case by showing invalidity of the process as a basis for proving abuse thereof.<sup>78</sup>

Actual malice

In action for abuse of process, actual malice is unimportant if process is willfully used to accomplish purpose intended, since unlawful acts willfully done are to be deemed malicious as to those injured thereby.—Coplea v. Bybee, 8 N.E.2d 55, 290 Ill.App. 117.

(d) Want of Probable Cause

Want of probable cause for instituting the proceedings in which the process was issued is not an essential element of an action for abuse of process.

In order to support an action for abuse of process it is not necessary to show want of probable cause for instituting the proceeding in which the process was issued,<sup>79</sup> or, although there is authority apparently to the contrary,<sup>80</sup> for suing out the process.<sup>81</sup> Some authorities have held that want of probable cause for the acts constituting the abuse of process is essential,<sup>82</sup> while others have indicated that it is not essential<sup>83</sup> because there can be no such thing as probable cause for perversion of process.<sup>84</sup>

(e) Termination of Process or Proceeding

Termination of the proceedings in which the process was issued is not an essential element of an action for abuse of process.

Plaintiff in an action for abuse of process need not show that the process improperly employed is at an end,<sup>85</sup> or that the proceeding in which it was issued has terminated.<sup>86</sup> It has been held,

c. Malicious Use of Process

Essential elements of an action for malicious use of process are malice, want of probable cause, and termination of the proceedings in which the process was used favorably to plaintiff in the action for malicious use of process.

malice of the proceedings in which the process was used favorably to plaintiff in the action for malicious use of process.

In order to support an action for malicious use of process it must appear that the process complained of was issued and served,<sup>88</sup> that defendant acted maliciously,<sup>89</sup> and without probable cause,<sup>90</sup> and that the proceeding in which the process was used has terminated<sup>91</sup> favorably to plaintiff in the action for malicious use,<sup>92</sup> before he filed his suit

Inference of malice

Malice in such a case need not be express, but may be inferred from a total want of probable cause.—Johns v. Gibson, 4 S.E.2d 480, 60 Ga.App. 585.

Allegations in petition for mandamus to obtain access to allegedly public records in clerk's office that clerk had become "arrogant in manner and drunk with power" afforded no basis for charge of improper use of court's processes.—Hunter v. Beckley Newspapers Corp., 40 S.E.2d 332, 129 W.Va. 302.

50 C.J. p 622 note 74.

What constitutes

Probable cause, in action for malicious use of process, depends on whether defendant had reasonable ground to believe plaintiff was indebted, as alleged in former action.—Mumford v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 162 S.E. 661, 44 Ga.App. 52.

Effect of probable cause

An action filed with probable cause, no matter with what motive, cannot serve as basis for subsequent suit for malicious use of process.—Beatus v. Darling Stores Corp., 33 S.E.2d 37, 72 Ga.App. 84.

Want of probable cause in suit exists, so as to authorize recovery of damages for malicious use of civil process, where circumstances are such as to satisfy reasonable man that one bringing suit had no ground for proceeding except his desire to injure defendant therein.—Johns v. Gibson, 4 S.E.2d 480, 60 Ga.App. 585.

Bad faith

Kan.—Bankers' Inv. Co. v. Butts, 276 P. 824, 128 Kan. 213.

Process obtained at request of plaintiff

An action on the case for raising a writ of habeas corpus to be issued and served on the party therein alleged to be restrained, who that his authority and against his consent, cannot be maintained if it appears that the complaint was made by authority from plaintiff and such request, expressed either directly to defendant or indirectly through some other person.—*Linda v. #### Reason for rule

Want of probable cause in the institution of the original action is an element of the offense which cannot be determined until that action is ended.—Garland v. Wilson, 137 A. 266, 289 Pa. 272.

Pendency of original suit

Suit for malicious use of process in bringing equity suit could not be maintained while suit was pending.—Garland v. Wilson, 137 A. 266, 289 Pa. 272.

50 C.J. p 622 note 76.

Nonresidence of plaintiff did not abrogate the rule requiring termination of a suit in favor of defendants before an action for malicious use of civil process can be maintained against the party who brings the alleged wrongful suit.—Georgia Veneer & Package Co. v. Florida Nat. Bank, 32 S.E.2d 465, 198 Ga. 591.

for damages.<sup>93</sup> It must further appear that the process maliciously used was valid.<sup>94</sup>

While malice may be inferred from a total want of probable cause,<sup>95</sup> want of probable cause cannot be inferred from the existence of malice.<sup>96</sup>

Interference with person or property. It has been held that the prosecution of a civil action maliciously and without probable cause gives rise to a cause of action for malicious use of process only when the person or property of the defendant has been interfered with, as by arrest or attachment<sup>97</sup> or some special damage has been done to him other than such as necessarily results in all like suits.<sup>98</sup> Interference with the person or property has been held unnecessary in the case of the wrongful institution of a lunacy proceeding.<sup>99</sup>

Recovery on cross bill

In conditional seller's action of bill trover for automobile, defendant's recovery, on cross bill disaffirming conditional sales contract for automobile, of part of payments made was not termination in favor of defendant which warranted defendant's recovery for malicious use of legal process.—Coggins v. General Motors Acceptance Corporation, 170 S.E. 308, 47 Ga.App. 314.

Merits of cause

The termination need not be on the merits of the cause.—Scheide v. Home Credit Co., 162 A. 321, 107 Pa. Super. 204.

Satisfaction of execution by agreement

Where assignee of note entered judgment thereon and issued execution after note was paid, satisfaction thereof by parties' agreement after maker's petition to open judgment was not final adjudication favorable to maker. Such agreement for satisfaction of the judgment bars the maker's action for malicious use of process.—Scheide v. Home Credit Co., 162 A. 321, 107 Pa. Super. 204.

§ 121. Particular Forms of Process Subject to Abuse

In some jurisdictions actions for malicious abuse or malicious use of process may be predicated on process in either a civil or criminal proceeding; in other jurisdictions process in civil proceedings only may be the basis for such actions.

In defining the terms "abuse" or "malicious abuse" of process and in enforcing the remedy therefor, some courts have made no distinction between civil or criminal process; either of such processes constitutes a basis for an action of abuse of process.<sup>1</sup> Others, however, have confined the remedy to an abuse of civil process.<sup>2</sup> Similarly, some authorities use the term "malicious use of process" as referable to either civil or criminal process,<sup>3</sup> while others confine it to use of civil process.<sup>4</sup>

2. Ga.—Hughes v. Georgia Power Co., 15 S.E.2d 466, 469, 65 Ga.App. 163.—Floyd County Dairies v. Brooks, 6 S.E.2d 360, 61 Ga.App. 239.

"There is no cause of action for malicious abuse of criminal process."—Dugas v. Darden, 15 S.E.2d 901, 903, 65 Ga.App. 394.

"Malicious abuse of legal process is where a plaintiff in a civil proceeding willfully misapplies the process of a court in order to obtain an object which such a process is not intended by law to effect."—Baldwin v. Davis, 4 S.E.2d 458, 462, 188 Ga. 537.—Simpson v. Jones, 188 S.E. 558, 182 Ga. 544.—Price v. Fidelity Trust Co., 41 S.E.2d 614, 74 Ga.App. 836.—*Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corporation v. 50 C.J. p 622 note 69.

"Malicious use of legal process is where the plaintiff in a civil proceeding employs the court's process in order to execute the object which the law intends for such a process to subserve, but proceeds maliciously and without probable cause."—Baldwin v. Davis, 4 S.E.2d 458, 460.

Abuse of process has been predicated on perversion of the process of civil<sup>5</sup> or criminal<sup>6</sup> arrest, dispossessory warrant,<sup>7</sup> search warrant,<sup>8</sup> subpoena,<sup>9</sup> warrant of seizure,<sup>10</sup> or writ of removal.<sup>11</sup> A malicious institution of a proceeding to inquire into the sanity of another may also constitute abuse of process.<sup>12</sup>

Wrongful attachment as a basis for liability is considered in Attachment §§ 503-565, wrongful distress, in Landlord and Tenant § 715, wrongful execution, in Executions §§ 451-458, wrongful garnishment, in Garnishment §§ 310-313, wrongful injunction, in Injunctions §§ 278-316, and wrongful sequestration, in the C.J.S. title Sequestration § 21, also 57 C.J. p 261 note 85-p 270 note 64.

improper use of a writ of capias ad respondendum does not invalidate the writ or the act of the court in issuing it, although plaintiff may be responsible to defendant for the improper use.<sup>13</sup>

§ 122. Persons Liable

As a general rule all persons who knowingly participate in an abuse of process are liable for the damages caused thereby.

As a general rule, all persons who knowingly participate in an abuse of process are liable for damages caused thereby,<sup>14</sup> as, for example, an agent<sup>15</sup> or attorney, as discussed in Attorney and Client § 52 b, the officer executing the process,<sup>16</sup> or a person aiding, advising, or abetting the officer's unlawful acts<sup>17</sup> or subsequently ratifying 188 Ga. 587—Simpson v. Jones, 186 S.E. 558, 182 Ga. 544—Price v. Fidelity Trust Co., 41 S.E.2d 614, 74 Ga. App. 838—Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corporation v. Downs, 3 S.E.2d 124, 126, 60 Ga. Proper and only remedy for the "malicious use" of criminal process, valid on its face and maliciously sued out without probable cause, is an action for malicious arrest or malicious prosecution.—Floyd County Dairies v. Brooks, 6 S.E.2d 360, 61 Ga. App. 239—Grist v. White, 80 S.E. 519, 14 Ga. App. 147.

Commitment for nonpayment of alimony

The obtaining by a wife and her attorneys of an order for commitment of husband to jail for failure to pay alimony arrearage, and withholding execution until the beginning of a holiday week end when courts would be closed and husband would find it impossible to obtain his release, constituted actionable "abuse of process" under guise of compelling payment of accrued alimony. Husband's right of action in such case was not nullified by his obtaining release from prison several hours after the commitment, since the tort occurred when the order of commitment was executed.—Rothbard v. Ringler, 77 N.Y.S.2d 351.

Arrest of fugitive from justice

The willful and malicious arrest of another as a fugitive from justice, where the charge is known to be false, is ground for an action for abuse of process.—Keller v. Butler, 158 N.E. 510, 246 N.Y. 249, 55 A.L.R. 349.

An arrest is not privileged unless made for purpose of bringing person arrested before a court, body, or official, or otherwise securing administration of law.—Hoppe v. Klapperich, 28 N.W.2d 780, 224 Minn. 224, 178 A.L.R. 819.

Person directing officer

(1) In action for abuse of legal process, deputy sheriff who served attachment writ was agent of defendants who were personally present and directed his conduct.—Sallem v. Glovsky, 172 A. 4, 132 Me. 402.

(2) Where attaching officer acted under express direction of creditor's attorney, creditor was liable in damages for abuse of process.—Bourisk v. Derry Lumber Co., 156 A. 382, 130 Me. 376.

them.<sup>18</sup> However, a plaintiff who does not direct or participate in abuse of process by the officer, and does not ratify his acts, is not liable;<sup>19</sup> nor is he liable for unauthorized acts of his agent.<sup>20</sup>

§ 123. Defenses

The absence of an essential element of the tort constitutes a defense to an action for abuse of process or for malicious use of process.

The absence of a necessary element of the tort may be interposed as a defense to the action for abuse of process,<sup>22</sup> as well as to the action of malicious use of process.<sup>23</sup> Thus, good faith has been held a defense to an action for abuse of process.<sup>24</sup> However, advice of counsel has been held not to be a bar to such an action,<sup>25</sup> although it may be shown in mitigation of damages.<sup>26</sup> Probable cause alone, without proof of the absence of malice, is a defense to an action for malicious use of process.<sup>27</sup>

§ 124. Actions

- a. Right of action
- b. Form of action
- c. When right of action accrues
- d. Pleading
- e. Evidence
- f. Trial
- g. Damages

a. Right of Action

A right of action for abuse of process, or for malicious use of process, exists in favor of the injured person.

An abuse of process is a wrong which the courts will not permit,<sup>29</sup> and have power to prevent, as discussed in Courts § 88. The law gives the person aggrieved by the wrongful act a cause of action against the offending person.<sup>30</sup> Such an action is an independent cause of action,<sup>31</sup> as distinguished from an action for malicious prosecution, discussed in Malicious Prosecution § 1 et seq, and from an action for false imprisonment, discussed in False Imprisonment § 1 et seq, and is expressly recognized at common law.<sup>32</sup>

b. Form of Action

Except where the matter has been otherwise regulated by statute, the proper form of action to bring for an abuse of process is ordinarily case or trespass.

Except where the matter has been otherwise regulated by statute, the proper form of action to bring for an abuse of process is ordinarily case<sup>35</sup> or trespass.<sup>36</sup> Case, and not trespass, is the proper remedy for an injury effected by regular process of a court of competent jurisdiction or acts done under color of such authority,<sup>37</sup> although the process may have been fraudulently or maliciously procured,<sup>38</sup> or may be irregular or voidable by reason of facts not appearing on the face of the process or proceeding;<sup>39</sup> but trespass, and not case, is the proper remedy where the process or proceeding is void or irregular on its face,<sup>40</sup> or where it has been annulled or set aside for irregularity,<sup>41</sup> or where process against one person is levied on the goods of another.<sup>42</sup> Where the proceeding subsequently set aside for irregularity was in full force and effect at the time the action for the injury was brought, case and not trespass is the proper remedy;<sup>43</sup> and this is also true where the process was abated for another action pending.<sup>44</sup> The trespass may be waived and an action on the case brought if the issuance of the process was malicious.<sup>45</sup> In particular instances the proper remedy has been held to be case<sup>46</sup> or to be trespass.<sup>47</sup>

The cause of action for abuse of process is complete as soon as the acts complained of are committed. The remedy for a malicious use of process, however, is not available until the termination of the original proceedings.

Since it need not be shown that the suit in which the process was abused has terminated, as discussed supra § 120 b (2) (e), the cause of action for an abuse of process is complete as soon as the acts complained of are committed.<sup>48</sup> However, it has been held that where the parties are adversaries in pending and undecided litigation, a termination of such litigation is required before suit for malicious abuse of process may be instituted and tried.<sup>49</sup> It has also been held that before a cause of action in the nature of a counterclaim can accrue for abuse of process, the original action must have terminated or the process must have been wholly annulled.<sup>50</sup>

Departure from terms of warrant

In determining liability for abuse of process, from moment when there was a departure from terms of bench warrant, plaintiff's arrest became unlawful aside from any improper intent or purpose on part of defendants.—Ingo v. Koch, C.C.A.N.Y., 127 F.2d 667.

49. N.Y.—Friedman v. Roseth Corp., 74 N.Y.S.2d 733, 190 Misc. 742, modified on other grounds 75 N.Y. S.2d 515, 278 App.Div. 755.

Minn.—Blue Earth Valley Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth Utilities Co., 167 N.W. 554, 140 Minn. 198.

Reason for rule

The orderly conduct of this litigation requires that plaintiff's action be tried first. If that action fails, a determination can then be sought in an action for abuse of process.—Friedman v. Roseth Corp., 74 N.Y.S. 2d 733, 190 Misc. 742, modified on other grounds 75 N.Y.S.2d 515, 278 App.Div. 755.

The remedy of malicious use of process is not available until after the termination of the original action.<sup>51</sup>

d. Pleading

In order to be sufficient, the pleadings of plaintiff in an action for abuse of process or for malicious use of process must allege facts disclosing all the essential elements of the cause of action.

In accordance with the general rules of pleading in civil actions, facts disclosing all the essential elements of the cause of action for abuse of process should be sufficiently alleged in plaintiff's declaration, complaint, or petition.<sup>52</sup> Thus, plaintiff should allege not only an actual use of the process,<sup>53</sup> but its willful use,<sup>54</sup> unlawfully,<sup>55</sup> for a wrongful purpose,<sup>56</sup> and that damage to plaintiff resulted therefrom.<sup>57</sup> Facts, rather than conclusions, must be stated,<sup>58</sup> but an allegation of facts from which a willful abuse<sup>59</sup> and wrongful purpose<sup>60</sup> may reasonably be inferred is sufficient without specific allegation of these elements.

It is not necessary to allege that the process was maliciously sued out,<sup>61</sup> but it may be necessary to allege that the process, after it had been sued out, was maliciously abused.<sup>62</sup>

for the issuance of the process,<sup>63</sup> or for the institution of the proceedings in which the process was employed<sup>64</sup> or termination of such proceedings,<sup>65</sup> or termination of the process employed.<sup>66</sup>

The addition to a count in a complaint stating a cause of action for abuse of process, of allegations suitable to another action, will not necessarily make the count bad.<sup>67</sup>

able termination of the proceedings in which the process was maliciously used.<sup>71</sup> Plaintiff must set forth the facts from which the elements appear, and not merely state conclusions.<sup>72</sup>

e. Evidence

The general rules of evidence in civil cases apply in an action for abuse of process or for malicious use of process.

The general rules of evidence in civil cases govern as to the admissibility<sup>73</sup> and weight and sufficiency<sup>74</sup> of evidence in actions for abuse of process.

Demurrable defect

A petition in an action for malicious use of process was demurrable where it did not aver that the action on which the process was issued had terminated in favor of defendant therein.—Beatus v. ### Allegation of false averment

On petition for malicious use of bail trover process, allegation that defendant made false averment in affidavit for bail trover did not supply element of favorable termination. Such allegation went merely to want of probable cause.—Sherrod v. Haverty Furniture Co., 179 S.E. 164, 50 Ga.App. 549.

Loss of time

Testimony as to loss of time in seeking a new place to live before as well as after service of writ of possession obtained by abuse of process was insufficient to require allowance of damages in such respect where there was no segregation of the loss of time after the service of such writ.—Bille v. Manning, 210 P.2d 254, 94 Cal.App.2d 142.

Malicious use of process. Plaintiff in an action for the malicious use of process has the burden of proving the essential elements of the tort alleged, such as malice and want of probable cause,<sup>75</sup> and termination of the original proceedings favorably to him.<sup>76</sup> Failure of plaintiff in the original proceedings does not of itself raise a presumption that such suit was instituted maliciously<sup>77</sup> or without probable cause;<sup>78</sup> nor is malice or want of probable cause proved by such termination,<sup>79</sup> although such fact is generally sufficient to indicate where the preponderance of the evidence lies.<sup>80</sup> evidence apply in actions for malicious use of process,<sup>81</sup> and proof of malice and want of probable cause may be founded on circumstantial evidence.<sup>82</sup>

f. Trial

In an action for abuse of process or for malicious use of process, questions of fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court.

In actions for the abuse of process, questions of fact, such as the unlawful use of process,<sup>83</sup> or defendant's liability for such abuse,<sup>84</sup> the amount of damages to be awarded,<sup>85</sup> and, where allowable, whether plaintiff should be awarded exemplary damages,<sup>86</sup> should be submitted to the jury under

Evidence in respect of malice was held insufficient to warrant submitting question of exemplary damages for abuse of process.—Sokolowske v. Wilson, 235 N.W. 80, 211 Iowa 1112.

Evidence held sufficient

To warrant submission of question proper instructions from the court.<sup>87</sup> A dismissal<sup>88</sup> or nonsuit<sup>89</sup> or a direction of verdict for defendant<sup>90</sup> is properly granted where the evidence for plaintiff fails to establish the essential elements of the wrong. Where the court grants a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a cause of action, it will also deny a cross motion by plaintiff for the assessment of damages.<sup>91</sup>

Malicious use of process. Where plaintiff, after opportunity for amendment, does not sufficiently plead a cause of action for malicious use of process, his action will be dismissed.<sup>92</sup> In actions for malicious use of process, questions of fact should be submitted to the jury,<sup>93</sup> but where the material facts are not in dispute or where only one reasonable inference can be drawn from the evidence, the court should direct a verdict.<sup>94</sup> The court should fully and correctly instruct the jury as to the law with respect to the issues,<sup>95</sup> and, where the complaint sets out a cause of action for malicious use of process, the court should not submit the case to the jury as one for malicious abuse of process.<sup>96</sup> A nonsuit may also be granted where the evidence as to the essential elements of the tort is insufficient to warrant its submission to the jury.<sup>97</sup>

g. Damages

Compensatory damages are recoverable in an action for abuse of process or for malicious use of process, and exemplary damages are sometimes allowable.

Damages recoverable for abuse of process are compensatory for the natural results of the wrong,<sup>98</sup> and may include recompense for physical<sup>99</sup> or mental<sup>1</sup> injury; expenses;<sup>2</sup> loss of time;<sup>3</sup> and injury to business,<sup>4</sup> property,<sup>5</sup> or financial standing.<sup>6</sup>

Counsel fees incurred as an expense in attempting to protect oneself from an abuse of process may be a proper element of damage;<sup>7</sup> but fees paid counsel to prosecute the action for abuse of process are not recoverable as compensatory damages.<sup>8</sup>

It has been held that, where pleaded without timely objection, plaintiff may recover in abuse of process for elements of damage arising from malicious prosecution<sup>9</sup> or false imprisonment.<sup>10</sup>

Where, under general rules of damages, exemplary damages cannot be awarded in the absence of statutory authorization therefor, as considered of punitive damages to jury.—Wheeler v. Miller, 49 Pa.Super. 91.

in Damages § 117, no such damages can be awarded in an action for abuse of process in the absence of a statute providing therefor.<sup>11</sup> On the other hand, where exemplary damages may be awarded under general rules, such damages may be recovered in an action for abuse of process where actual malice is shown,<sup>12</sup> but no such damages can be recovered in the absence of actual malice.<sup>13</sup> It has also been held, however, that where actual damages are proved in the action, the jury may also add punitive damages;<sup>14</sup> but the punitive damages awarded must not be wholly disproportionate to the actual damages.<sup>15</sup>

Malicious use of process. In jurisdictions where such damages may be awarded, exemplary damages may be recovered in an action for malicious use of process.<sup>16</sup>

PROCESSION. As a noun, a group, especially of persons or of vehicles containing persons, moving onward in an orderly, ceremonious, or solemn manner; an orderly file or formation, especially of marchers; a parade.<sup>1</sup>

As a verb, to beat the bounds of a parish, lands, etc.; in some of the North American colonies, and still in the states of North Carolina and Tennessee, to make a procession around a piece of land in order formally to determine its bounds.<sup>2</sup>

"Processioning" is defined as a proceeding to determine boundaries, in use in some of the United States, similar in all respects to the English "perambulation."<sup>4</sup>

The ascertainment and settlement of boundaries by processioners and processioning proceedings generally are discussed in Boundaries §§ 87, 88 c, f, j. The act of processioners in locating the public square and streets of a city as not being binding on property owners who did not consent thereto is treated in Municipal Corporations § 1663.

PROCESSOR. One who or that which processes; specifically, one who is in the business of converting any agricultural commodity into a marketable form.<sup>5</sup> It has been said that a grower is not a processor.<sup>6</sup>

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. In English practice, a writ for the continuance of process, after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer.<sup>7</sup>

PROCESSUS. As the first word of a maxim as to which there have been no recent applications see 50 C.J. p 624 note 15.

PROCÈS-VERBAL. A true relation in writing in due form of law of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer and what he himself does on the occasion; a species of inquisition of office.<sup>8</sup>

PROCHEIN. Next; nearest.<sup>9</sup>

Phrases

(1) "Prochein ami" see 3 C.J.S. p 1045 note 8. As employed in connection with persons not of full age see title index to Infants.

PROCLAIM. In its usual and ordinary signification, to give wide publicity to; to make known by public announcement; to publish abroad; to promulgate;<sup>10</sup> to disclose;<sup>11</sup> to declare.<sup>12</sup> In a technical sense, to make public announcement by formal proclamation.<sup>13</sup>

"Proclaim" has been held synonymous with "announce" see 3 C.J.S. p 1370 note 68, "promulgate,"<sup>14</sup> and "publish."<sup>15</sup>

PROCLAMATION. The lexicographers agree in their definition of the word; and the expounders of the law have used nearly the same language.<sup>16</sup> Where it has not apparently been used otherwise, the word is to be given its usual and ordinary meaning.<sup>17</sup> While publicity is an important ingredient of a proclamation, and it is an essential element of its character that it should be openly and publicly made known,<sup>18</sup> it is sufficient if it has such publicity as accomplishes the end to be attained.<sup>19</sup>

"Proclamation" is defined as meaning the act of proclaiming<sup>20</sup> or publishing;<sup>21</sup> any announcement made in a public manner;<sup>22</sup> a publication;<sup>23</sup> a declaration or notice by public outcry;<sup>24</sup> a formal declaration; an avowal.<sup>25</sup> The word is also used to express the public nomination made of any one to a high office.<sup>26</sup>

given to the public;<sup>28</sup> an official public notification by some executive authority of the occurrence of an event important to the public, or of command, caution, or warning in relation to a matter impending;<sup>29</sup> a notice publicly given of anything whereof the executive thinks fit to inform and notify the public;<sup>30</sup> a public notice by an official of some order, an intended action, or some state of facts;<sup>31</sup> a public notice in writing given by a state or city official of some act done by the government, or to be done by the people;<sup>32</sup> a publication by authority.<sup>33</sup>

Presidential proclamations are discussed generally in the C.J.S. title United States § 30, also 65 C.J. p 1271 notes 66-73; and a proclamation of the president of the United States reserving public lands from sale is treated in Public Lands § 74. The terms "proclamation" and "proclamations" are treated in various other connections throughout this work, particular reference being made to the indexes to the titles Corporations, Elections, Evidence, and Municipal Corporations.

PROCRASTINATE. To be dilatory; to waste time when one should act; to delay action through laziness, indifference, or indecision.<sup>35</sup>

"Procrastinating" has been held to be an antonym of "prompt."<sup>36</sup>

PROCRASTINATION. A term said to be without foundation in law or equity,<sup>37</sup> and defined as meaning the act or habit of procrastinating; delay; dilatoriness.<sup>38</sup>

PROCTOR. One appointed to manage the affairs of another or represent him in judgment.<sup>39</sup>

PROCURADOR JUDICIAL. See Attorney and Client § 16.

PROCURATION. Defined see Agency § 27.

PROCURATOR. In the civil law, a proctor, that is, a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration; in old English law, an agent or attorney, a bailiff or servant, a proxy of a lord in parliament.<sup>40</sup>

In its broadest sense the word "procure" means to prevail upon, induce, or persuade a person to do something;<sup>47</sup> and it is variously defined as meaning to induce;<sup>48</sup> to induce to do something;<sup>49</sup> to prevail upon;<sup>50</sup> to persuade;<sup>51</sup> to entreat;<sup>52</sup> to solicit;<sup>53</sup> to contrive;<sup>54</sup> to effect;<sup>55</sup> to contrive and effect.<sup>56</sup>

(1) "One of the definitions of the word 'procuring' is 'to obtain by any means'."—Ronnnow v. City of Las Vegas, 65 P.2d 133, 140, 57 Nev. 332.

(2) "Procuring means to obtain, to secure, and to get."—U. S. v. Oruga, 6 Philippine 351.

standing alone, may not be entirely definite.<sup>79</sup> It is defined as meaning acquired; obtained;<sup>80</sup> and it has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "at the instance of" see 7 C.J.S. p 165 note 56, and has been distinguished from "permitted" see 70 C.J.S. p 568 note 79.

Phrases employing the word in its various forms are set out in the note.<sup>81</sup>

PROCUREMENT. The act of procuring, obtaining, bringing about, or effecting.<sup>82</sup> It denotes direction, influences, personal exertion, interference, or other action, with knowledge or belief that such action would produce certain results, which results are produced.<sup>83</sup> Although procurement may be by coaxing, tempting, luring, and the like, which are the characteristic means of enticement, neither persuasion nor inducing nor enticing attraction need be employed.<sup>84</sup>

PROCURER. One who uses means to bring anything about, especially one who does so secretly and corruptly.<sup>85</sup> The term is frequently defined as meaning a panderer; a pimp; that is, one who supplies women to houses of ill fame, and in this sense is treated in Prostitution § 6.

PRODUCE. The word "produce" is derived from

"pro" meaning before, and "duco" meaning to lead.<sup>86</sup> It has no definite, exact, and particular meaning,<sup>87</sup> but a variety of meanings dependent on the connection in which it is used,<sup>88</sup> and it may be employed in a larger or more restricted sense,<sup>89</sup> but the scope of the word, as judicially defined, can be narrowed only by some other language, employed to express a different intent.<sup>90</sup>

As a noun. The common meaning of the word "produce" is production, or that which is produced; brought forth, or yielded, a product or a yield.<sup>91</sup> Similar definitions indicate that "produce" is something brought forth or yielded, as garden products,<sup>92</sup> and the term specifically means an agricultural product or products.<sup>93</sup> The yield of the garden is produce,<sup>94</sup> and the term has been held to include flowers and plants as well as vegetables,<sup>95</sup> tobacco,<sup>96</sup> cotton,<sup>97</sup> and hay.<sup>98</sup> Meat,<sup>99</sup> cement,<sup>1</sup> and coke<sup>2</sup> are sometimes considered to be produce.

On the other hand, "produce" has been held not to include livestock,<sup>3</sup> wild hay,<sup>4</sup> or an abstract of a land title.<sup>5</sup>

The noun "produce" has been held to be equivalent to "income" see 42 C.J.S. p 534 note 27, and has been compared with "provisions."<sup>6</sup>

As a verb, the word "produce" is defined as meaning to bring forth;<sup>7</sup> the word "produce" has also been said to mean to bring into being or form;<sup>8</sup> to give being or form to; to manufacture;<sup>9</sup> to make,<sup>10</sup> as, he produces excellent pottery.<sup>11</sup>

"Produce" is also defined as meaning to cause;<sup>12</sup> to cause to be or to happen;<sup>13</sup> to originate;<sup>14</sup> to create;<sup>15</sup> to generate;<sup>16</sup> to bear;<sup>17</sup> to yield; to furnish;<sup>18</sup> to give forth; to supply;<sup>19</sup> to bring forward; to lead forth.<sup>20</sup>

The term has been further defined as meaning to exhibit;<sup>21</sup> to bring to view; to declare;<sup>22</sup> to show; to offer to view or notice;<sup>23</sup> to extend; to lengthen; to prolong; to draw out.<sup>24</sup>

The verb "produce" has been held to be almost synonymous with "manufacture" see Manufactures § 1 a (4), and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "procure" see ante p 1207 note 75, and "surrender."<sup>25</sup>

Producing. Bringing about;<sup>26</sup> bringing into existence;<sup>27</sup> giving being or form to; manufacturing; making.<sup>28</sup>

The word "produced" as used in a lease which is to continue as long as oil or gas is "produced" means substantially the same as "produced in paying quantities," see Mines and Minerals § 202 c (2) (b) bb.

Phrases employing the word in its various forms are set out in the note.<sup>30</sup>

PRODUCER. One who produces, brings forth, or generates;<sup>31</sup> anyone who produces, generates, or brings forth an article;<sup>32</sup> one who brings something into existence from its original source or materials.<sup>33</sup> The term is commonly used to denote a person who raises agricultural crops and puts them in a condition for the market.<sup>34</sup>

"Producer" and "manufacturer" have been held identical or synonymous, and the terms have also been distinguished, see Manufactures § 1 b (3). "Producer" has been distinguished from "dealer" see 25 C.J.S. p 1043 note 8, and "owner" see Property § 13.

PRODUCT. Anything produced,<sup>35</sup> whether as the result of generation, growth, labor, or thought,<sup>36</sup> or by the operation of involuntary causes;<sup>37</sup> a thing produced by nature or the natural processes;<sup>38</sup> that which is produced by an action, operation, or work; a production.<sup>39</sup> The term is also defined as meaning that which results from operation of a cause, consequence, or effect;<sup>40</sup> anything obtained as a result; the result obtained by multiplication.<sup>41</sup>

something, and which, when made, has characteristics which are apparent to the senses.<sup>42</sup> It has been held to include whisky manufactured from grain by the use of labor,<sup>43</sup> peaches,<sup>44</sup> cotton,<sup>45</sup> electricity,<sup>46</sup> and nails.<sup>47</sup>

On the other hand, the word "product" has been interpreted as not including live stock,<sup>48</sup> parts of slaughtered hogs,<sup>49</sup> or labor.<sup>50</sup>

"Product" has been held synonymous with "commodity" see 15 C.J.S. p 588 note 18.2, "fruit" see 37 C.J.S. p 1389 note 38, and "proceeds" see ante p 974 note 46. It has been distinguished from "process" see ante p 976 note 67.

"Products" means things produced,<sup>51</sup> and the products of a farm are those things raised upon the farm, whether such products be live stock or crops.<sup>52</sup>

Products of exempt property as being exempt from seizure and sale for the payment of debts are discussed generally in Exemptions § 62; and with respect to exemption of products of a homestead estate see Homesteads § 70 b. Tax exemptions to products of manufacturing companies are treated in the C.J.S. title Taxation § 275, also 61 C.J. p 441 note 4—p 443 note 21. The right of the cestui que trust to follow or trace trust property through any change in form or species and to have the trust attached to the products or substitutes, and the right to elect to do so, are discussed in the C.J.S. title Trusts §§ 437–439, also 65 C.J. p 968 note 38—p 979 note 25, p 981 notes 36–40. PRODUCTION. A term of rather broad and comprehensive meaning<sup>54</sup> which may designate a thing produced as well as the operation of producing.<sup>55</sup> It is defined as meaning the creation of something;<sup>56</sup> the act of producing, or the state of being produced; manufacture;<sup>57</sup> that which is produced or made; product; fruit of labor.<sup>58</sup> It has been said that transportation is a form of production.<sup>59</sup>

In political economy, "production" means the creation of objects which constitute wealth,<sup>60</sup> and in an economic sense production requires planning and control as well as manual labor,<sup>61</sup> and thus includes all activity directed to increasing the number of scarce economic goods, not simply the manual, physical labor involved in changing the form or utility of a tangible article.<sup>62</sup>

Production used in connection with insurance as meaning obtaining business see Insurance § 49. The production of books, papers, writings, and various other documents and instruments is discussed throughout this work, particular reference being made to the C.J.S. titles Attachment § 136; Bills and Notes § 361; Bonds § 125; Carriers §§ 172 c, 597, 611; Depositions § 62; Discovery § 18; Evidence §§ 753-762; Master and Servant § 151 (31); Searches and Seizures §§ 35-48, also 56 C.J. p 1169 note 79-p 1174 note 65; Sheriffs and Constables § 7, also 57 C.J. p 738 notes 56-58; States § 46, also 59 C.J. p 99 notes 94-97; Wills §§ 306, 311, 447, 448, also 68 C.J. p 872 notes 77-83, p 878 note 60-p 881 note 26, p 1059 note 40-p 1060 note 59; and Witnesses § 448, also 70 C.J. p 743 note 77-p 745 note 96.

§ 1. Definition

"Profanity" means words denoting irreverence toward God or holy things.

"Profanity" means words denoting irreverence of God and holy things;<sup>1</sup> words importing an imprecation of divine vengeance,<sup>2</sup> or implying divine condemnation.<sup>3</sup> The term "profane" has been defined as irreverent toward God or holy things;<sup>4</sup> speaking or spoken; acting or acted, in manifest or implied contempt of sacred things.<sup>5</sup>

§ 2. Nature and Elements of Offense

The nature and elements of the offense of profanity at common law are discussed infra § 3, and, under statutes, infra § 4.

§ 3. — At Common Law

At common law profane swearing and cursing to an extent which constitutes a common nuisance are a criminal offense.

Profane swearing and cursing, in a loud and boisterous tone of voice, and in the presence and hearing of citizens of the commonwealth in a public place, to such an extent as to be a common nuisance to all citizens being present and hearing such swearing and cursing, is an indictable offense at common law.<sup>6</sup> While generally, it is necessary that the profane words should be repeated in order to constitute a common nuisance,<sup>7</sup> it is not always so;<sup>8</sup> a single utterance, if the words used, or the tone, or the manner, or the circumstances surrounding it, make it a common nuisance, may constitute the common-law offense.<sup>9</sup> In itself, however, independently of the circumstances giving it the character of a common nuisance, a single utterance of a profane word is not indictable at common law.<sup>10</sup> Where the cursing is repeated to such an extent as to become a public nuisance, the common-law offense is complete,<sup>11</sup> even though the cursing is confined to a single occasion,<sup>12</sup> and to a limited period.<sup>13</sup> However, a continued use of profane words, in the absence of any showing that it constituted a common nuisance, is not indictable.<sup>14</sup>

Publicity. In order to make profane swearing a nuisance, and an indictable offense at common law, the profanity must be uttered in the hearing of other persons.<sup>15</sup> It is not necessary that the language used should have been heard by a large portion of the people in the community, provided it is heard by some.<sup>16</sup> It is not enough merely that it was done in the public streets;<sup>17</sup> but, if the acts are committed in the presence of other persons, then, as far as the character of the place may be material, such presence will, it is said, make any place for the occasion public.<sup>18</sup>

§ 4. — Under Statutes

Statutes or municipal ordinances sometimes make punishable profanity, and the like; whether particular matters constitute offenses under such statutes or ordinances depends largely on the terms thereof duly construed.

The offense of profanity, profane cursing, or using profane language has been made punishable by some statutes<sup>19</sup> or municipal ordinances.<sup>20</sup> Statutes or ordinances of this type are strictly construed.<sup>21</sup> The character and elements of the offense is in these cases fixed by the terms of the statute<sup>22</sup> or ordinance.<sup>23</sup> If within the terms of statute or ordinance, it is an offense, even though the facts do not constitute a public nuisance,<sup>24</sup> as, for example, where the profane language is not publicly spoken<sup>25</sup> or repeated.<sup>26</sup> All statutory elements must be shown to exist before accused can be convicted of the offense,<sup>27</sup> as, for example, that the profane words were spoken in the presence of a female,<sup>28</sup> without provocation.<sup>29</sup>

Words used. As a general rule words are profane or not, within the meaning of a penal statute or ordinance, according to the sense in which they are used,<sup>30</sup> and it is essential to show such sense by other words coupled therewith in order to establish an offense.<sup>31</sup> Under a statute so defining the offense, the use of God's name in a curse makes the offender amenable to the statute.<sup>32</sup> Except where the statute or ordinance makes it an essential element of the offense, generally, it is not necessary that the name of God should be used to constitute the offense, provided only the words used import

an imprecation of divine vengeance or imply divine condemnation,<sup>33</sup> as used with other words or under the circumstances in which they were spoken.<sup>34</sup> If, under the circumstances, the words, when spoken, do not carry this meaning, there is no offense.<sup>35</sup> Under a statute penalizing the use of obscene and vulgar or profane language, under certain circumstances, the words need not be even profane to constitute the offense, if they are vulgar or obscene.<sup>36</sup> Where the offense is statutory and the statute is construed to apply to spoken words only, the delivery of a written communication using the profane language does not constitute the offense.<sup>37</sup>

Place. Where the statute, by its terms, makes the prohibition against profanity operative in a particular locality or within defined limits, the profanity, in order to constitute an offense, must be within those limits.<sup>38</sup> The profane swearing must be in a public place, where the statute so defines the offense.<sup>39</sup> Under a statute or ordinance prohibiting the use of profanity in a street or public place, the use of the prohibited words on the veranda of a house close to a public street within hearing of persons passing on the street constitutes the offense.<sup>40</sup> Where the statute or ordinance prohibits the cursing "in any street, house or elsewhere in the city," cursing on private premises is an offense.<sup>41</sup>

§ 5. Prosecution

Prosecutions for certain offenses involving profanity may be by indictment, and summary proceeding will lie in some cases.

The prosecution for some offenses involving profanity may be by indictment, while a summary proceeding in the case of other such offenses may lie.<sup>42</sup> Where accused has uttered several oaths on the same day, a single summary proceeding before the magistrate may include them all,<sup>43</sup> or he may be prosecuted in a separate proceeding for each curse.<sup>44</sup>

In an information given under oath to a magistrate, it is not necessary to specify the offense or offenses with as much certainty as is necessary in an indictment.<sup>45</sup> The view has been taken that the information is sufficient if it follows the words of the statute.<sup>46</sup> Where a number of profane oaths are charged, the words of each oath need not be set forth;<sup>47</sup> the words of one, and the number of times it was uttered, are sufficient.<sup>48</sup> Where the statute requires that the information set out the nature of the oath, a setting out of the oath in the exact words used is sufficient.<sup>49</sup>

An indictment for the common-law offense involving nuisance must set forth all the facts and circumstances which go to make up the offense;<sup>50</sup> and an omission of an essential allegation will not be aided by proof of the facts omitted.<sup>51</sup> It has been held or recognized that essential averments are the words uttered<sup>52</sup> and an allegation to the common nuisance, or its equivalent, supported by alleged facts showing the profanity to be of that character,<sup>53</sup> as, for example, that the words were uttered in the presence or hearing of others,<sup>54</sup> and that they were so repeated in public as to have become an annoyance and inconvenience to the public.<sup>55</sup> The view has been taken, however, that, even though only a single act of profanity is alleged, it is not essential to set forth the particular circumstances which would render a single act a nuisance.<sup>56</sup> An allegation that the words were uttered publicly will not be sufficient,<sup>57</sup> unless the averment goes on to say that the words were uttered in the hearing of others so as to become a nuisance.<sup>58</sup> It is not necessary to set out the whole conversation, only as much of it as clearly describes the language used being necessary.<sup>59</sup>

While an indictment for a statutory offense of profanity has been held sufficient if it follows the words of the statute,<sup>60</sup> it has also been held or recognized that it should set out the words spoken;<sup>61</sup> but a failure to do so may be cured by verdict.<sup>62</sup> Where the statute defines the offense as profanity "in any public place," the indictment must state the particular public place where the profanity occurred.<sup>63</sup> Under an indictment alleging facts which would have constituted the offense at common law, accused cannot be convicted on proof of a state of facts which would merely satisfy the statute, where the statutory offense omits certain elements of the crime as defined at common law.<sup>64</sup>

Rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal prosecutions generally apply in prosecutions for profanity.<sup>65</sup> Under a statute making the uttering of profane oaths in the presence of a female and without provocation an offense, it is for the jury to determine whether accused knew that he was in the presence of a female,<sup>66</sup> and whether or not there was provocation.<sup>67</sup> The view has been taken that whether a single act of profanity constituted a nuisance is a question of fact for the jury.<sup>68</sup> An instruction in a prosecution for an offense here under consideration should be applicable to the evidence.<sup>69</sup>

Form of conviction. In a summary prosecution the precise form of conviction provided in the statute, not mandatory in its terms, need not be followed, provided only jurisdiction and the fact of conviction are shown.<sup>70</sup>

"Profert in curia," sometimes written "profert in curiam," law Latin, meaning he produces in court. In old practice these words were inserted in a declaration, as an allegation that plaintiff was ready to produce, or did actually produce, in court, the deed or other written instrument on which his suit was founded, in order that the court might inspect it and defendant hear it read. The same formula was used when defendant pleaded a written instrument.<sup>3</sup>

definition of the word "profession,"<sup>7</sup> and that the term may, perhaps, be best understood by mention of some prominent or characteristic elements, rather than by an attempted complete definition.<sup>8</sup> The word is vague,<sup>9</sup> and neither static nor rigid,<sup>10</sup> and is used in many different senses,<sup>11</sup> and in one sense it means a public declaration respecting something,<sup>12</sup> and in a somewhat different sense it means that of which one professes knowledge.<sup>13</sup> However, the word "profession" is more commonly employed in the sense of vocation, business, calling, or occupation, and it is in this sense that the term is treated in the following paragraphs.

calling or vocation requiring special knowledge of a branch of science or learning,<sup>18</sup> and in this somewhat restricted sense the word "profession" means an employment requiring a learned education,<sup>19</sup> as, a profession of arms, the profession of a clergyman, lawyer, or physician, the profession of chemistry or physics.<sup>20</sup>

"Profession" is further defined as meaning the occupation which one professes to be skilled in and to follow;<sup>21</sup> the business which one professes to understand and to follow<sup>22</sup> for subsistence;<sup>23</sup> the occupation, if not mechanical or agricultural, or the like, to which one devotes oneself;<sup>24</sup> any calling or occupation involving special mental and other attainments or special discipline, as editing, acting, engineering, authorship;<sup>25</sup> an occupation

involve compensation or profit,<sup>38</sup> and it is of the essence of a profession that the profits should be dependent mainly on the personal qualifications of the person by whom it is carried on.<sup>39</sup> It has been said that, in speaking of a person's profession, that branch of the world's activities wherein he expends his usual everyday efforts to gain a livelihood is referred to.<sup>40</sup>

Originally,<sup>41</sup> and historically,<sup>42</sup> the word "profession" was applied only to law, medicine, and theology or divinity,<sup>43</sup> and these were known as the three "learned professions,"<sup>44</sup> and it has frequently been said that formerly these were specifically known merely as "the professions."<sup>45</sup>

word "profession" is still sometimes specifically<sup>47</sup> applied only to the learned professions<sup>48</sup> and to the persons engaged therein.<sup>49</sup> However, the tendency has been to enlarge and extend the scope and meaning of the term,<sup>50</sup> and this has resulted in the word becoming more elastic and its denotation more liberalized,<sup>51</sup> so that it has long ceased to be connected only with, and restricted exclusively to, the so-called learned professions.<sup>52</sup> The word "profession" now has a broader and more comprehensive meaning than formerly was accorded to it,<sup>53</sup> and its signification now extends far beyond the well-known classical professions of earlier days,<sup>54</sup> and as the applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name.<sup>55</sup>

Applied to other occupations or callings

The term has come to be applied to other occupations or callings, all of which require learned and special preparation in the acquirement of scientific knowledge and skill, necessary to a proper understanding and successful management of such

Attorneys<sup>56</sup> and clergymen<sup>57</sup> are regarded as engaging in professions, as are physicians<sup>58</sup> and persons engaged in related or associated occupations<sup>59</sup> such as dentistry,<sup>60</sup> optometry,<sup>61</sup> and veterinary medicine and surgery.<sup>62</sup> The term "profession" is now generally applicable to accountants,<sup>63</sup> architects,<sup>64</sup> chemists,<sup>65</sup> editors,<sup>66</sup> electricians,<sup>67</sup> engineers,<sup>68</sup> journalists,<sup>69</sup> landscape architects,<sup>70</sup> and pharmacists<sup>71</sup> when engaged in the practice of their vocations. Certified shorthand reporting,<sup>72</sup> and teaching<sup>73</sup> are regarded as professions. For additional businesses, activities, or occupations which have been held to be professions see 50 C.J. p 638 note 25.

(3) Registered interstate commerce commission practitioner.—Pollock v. Mealey, 40 N.Y.S.2d 67, 68, 266 App.Div. 699.

(4) The earnings of a person whose work was confined to executive and clerical aspects of business organization and whose services involved improvement of methods of office management, etc., were not derived from practice of a profession.

tional businesses, activities, or occupations which have been held not to be professions see 50 C.J. p 639 note 26.

"Profession" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "business" see 12 C.J.S. p 773 note 53, "employment" see 30 C.J.S. p 234 note 68, and "occupation" see 67 C.J.S. p 77 note 48.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "business" see 12 C.J.S. p 774 note 69, "craft" see 21 C.J.S. p 1035 note 73, "occupation" see 67 C.J.S. p 77 note 53, "professional,"<sup>79</sup> and "trade."<sup>80</sup>

The right to engage in a profession, trade, or business is discussed in Constitutional Law § 224. Exemption from liability to seizure and sale of property owned by persons engaged in a profession see Exemptions § 24 d (7). Imputations tending to injury in business, profession, trade, office, or employment are treated in Libel and Slander §§ 32-52; and for professions subject to license or tax see Licenses § 30 a. "Profession" in ecclesiastical law is defined in Religious Societies § 39. For other particular applications and specific uses of the terms "profession" and "professions" consult the indexes to the various titles and the Descriptive-Word Index.

PROFESSIONAL. The word "professional" is used in many different senses,<sup>81</sup> and in one sense is defined as meaning that which pertains to a profession,<sup>82</sup> and in this sense the word implies knowledge of an advanced type in a given field of science or learning, gained by a prolonged course of specialized instruction or study,<sup>83</sup> and can only relate to some of those occupations universally classed as professions, the general duties and character of which the courts must be expected to understand judicially.<sup>84</sup> It has been said that the term "professional" is broad enough to include hair dressers;<sup>85</sup> but pawnbrokers, chauffeurs, venders of merchandise, and many others similarly engaged are not professionals.<sup>86</sup>

In a slightly different sense the word "professional" denotes one undertaking or engaging for money as a means of subsistence in a particular art,<sup>87</sup> and is defined as meaning engaged in by professionals, as a professional race; engaging in a profession, or, by extension, any calling, as a means of livelihood or for gain, as a professional golf player.<sup>88</sup> In this sense the word "professional" is distinguished from "amateur" see 3 C.J.S. p 1013.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.<sup>89</sup>

PROFESSOR. See Colleges and Universities § 20. As a nonquota alien within the meaning of the immigration act see Aliens § 89.

PROFILE. An outline or contour.<sup>90</sup> Technically speaking, a side or sectional elevation; a drawing showing a vertical section of the ground along a surveyed line or graded work.<sup>91</sup>

The filing or recordation of profiles showing the property to be appropriated as a prerequisite to the institution of condemnation proceedings and the taking of lands is discussed in Eminent Domain § 226; and statutory or charter provisions requiring a railroad company to file a profile of the location of its road in the counties through which it passes are treated in the C.J.S. title Railroads § 63, also 51 C.J. p 495 note 92-p 496 note 22.
